ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

A number of avid Star Wars collectors were kind enough to let me photograph their collections. Thanks especially to: Rob Rintoul, Rob Johnson, Wats Wacker, Morgan McClain, Harry Rinker Jr. and Marc Patten.

Many manufacturers of Star Wars items supplied information, catalogs or photographs. Thanks to: Don Post Studios, Alan Payne at Icons, Don Schmidt at Tiger Electronics, Tracy at Illusive Originals, Chaz Fitzhugh at Applause, Jim Schneider at Star Jars, Joshua Izzo at Topps, and Matt Mariani at Decipher, Inc. Thanks also to Kenner, Galoob, JusToys for all the trips through their showrooms during Toyfair for many years.

There are many excellent Web sites which post pictures of new and classic Star Wars toys. These are helpful in obtaining the correct name of figures and vehicles not otherwise seen and, in some cases, the UPC code.

Star Wars Collectibles

Made Between 1976 and 2002

This book covers Star Wars collectibles from the beginning, through the first quarter of 2002, with additional information on forthcoming items for Attack of the Clones. This is from the very beginning of the first or classic age of Star Wars through the end of the second age of Star Wars collectibles, perhaps destined to be known someday as the “Silver Age,” based on the Star Wars Trilogy Special Edition, and well into the third age based on Episode I, The Phantom Menace, now II, Attack of the Clones and eventually III.

From the collecting point of view, these ages were also known as famine, feast, famine, feast, and finally inundation.

Distribution in the United States

This book covers Star Wars collectibles distributed in the United States. While just about every foreign item makes its way to a few collectors in the United States, the only items listed here are ones which were distributed in enough quantity to be generally available. The most significant of these are the “Tri-Logo” action figures. These figures came on header cards with logos for “Return of the Jedi” in three languages (thus the name) and were intended for foreign markets. However, they were widely distributed in the United States as the Star Wars phenomenon was winding down in 1984–86. A few foreign figures, such as the Power of the Force Yak Face, are listed for completeness. Although never distributed in the United States, it is a necessary and expensive figure for collectors who want to complete their collections. Other figures on foreign header cards are worth less than their U. S. counterparts and are more likely to be bought by a collector as a temporary measure, until the more desirable American figure can be acquired. A more recent example is the Pizza Hut PVC figures which came out as in-store premiums in 1995 in Australia, but were distributed in quantity to comic shops in the United States in 1997, in sets of four.

Categories

The book is divided into sections based on the categories which collectors most frequently use in organizing their collections. The amount of coverage given to any category depends on its popularity. Action figures are the most popular Star Wars collectible and so they are given the most coverage — 85 pages, with additional sections on the vehicles, accessories and the 12 inch dolls. Actually, many of the less popular categories could just as well have been grouped in a section called “Other Stuff” because that is how most collectors view the items. However, this would have made it hard to use the book.

Grading

Most Star Wars items are graded on a 10-point scale from C-10 (the best) down to C-1. Hardly anything old qualifies as a C-10 and nobody admits that anything they are trying to sell is a C-1, so the actual number of categories is probably less than 10. Prices in this book are for items in their original packaging in “near mint” condition, which corresponds to about C-9 or C-9.5. The occasional extraordinary item that is actually “mint” (i.e. C-10) commands a slightly higher price. How much higher depends on how much better than an ordinary near mint copy it actually is. Mint means the same thing, regardless of age and type of product. It is not the same thing as “new.” Many, probably most, new action figure header cards are not mint. They have been handled when they were put in the shipping box, taken out of the box and hung on a rack, maybe dropped on the floor, handled by the check-out clerk, etc. This leaves an item which is a defect-free collectible, acceptable anywhere at the near-mint price. The figure inside is most likely mint, but rarely the package. “Near mint” does vary somewhat with the type of product. Some kinds of things are simply more durable than others and do not normally show any wear from normal handling. For those things, there is very little difference between the ordinary, (i.e. near mint) and the extraordinary, (i.e. mint) and probably very little difference in price.

Prices

A single price is given for each listed item. This represents the full retail price or asking price. Prices vary from one dealer to another and from one location to another so prices actually fall into a range. But even though no single price can be perfect for all situations, a price range of, for example, $40 to $100 is no more meaningful than a single price, and even less satisfying. The single price given in this book should be used as a guideline or baseline. If you can find the item that you want to buy for 10% to 25% less than this price you are getting a good deal. If you are paying more, but you really want the item, that’s okay too. Just shop around a little first to see if you can do better.

This book is based on the author’s research. The author is not a dealer in Star Wars collectibles and not associated with any dealer or manufacturer nor with Lucasfilm Ltd. or any of its licensees.

INTRODUCTION

The Star Wars Phenomenon

The Star Wars phenomenon started in 1977, and, after a little slump in the late 1980s, it is still going strong. Collectibles from the classic movie were available beginning in late 1976—first a poster and a book, then the comics in early 1977 and finally, after the movie opened, a few games and puzzles. The real flood didn't start until 1978 when the action figures actually arrived.

In Star Wars collecting, Kenner (now Hasbro) is King. Almost anything made by Kenner/Hasbro, and a lot of things they never quite made, is collected more intensely than anything, however attractive, made by anyone else. Was this inevitable? It didn't seem to be so at the time.

The first Star Wars collectible available to the general public was the original paperback book. I call it "Star Wars collectible #1." There was also a teaser poster, which was given out at the San Diego Comics Convention, held earlier that fall, but it was available only at the convention. If you are a computer person, you can call this "collectible #0" if you like. Anyway, the book appeared in November 1976, a full 7 months before the movie opened, and it was available at bookstores everywhere. Later book editions had a different cover and can easily be distinguished by the date on the copyright page. Unlike some of the most valuable action figures, the original paperback cannot be faked. Nevertheless, this paperback is not as valuable as any of the early action figures. A hardcover version of the book which came out in the fall is worth a lot more, but still not as much as the action figures.

Star Wars collectible #2 is the first issue of the comic book series from Marvel. It's worth a lot more than the paperback book and the 35¢ test issue of this comic is more valuable than many of the early action figures. A couple of issues of the comic came out before the movie opened. Other pre-opening collectibles include articles in movie magazines about the forthcoming movie and Time magazine which ran a two-page spread calling Star Wars the best movie of the year.

Many of today's Star Wars collectors were kids filled with wonder when they first saw the movie. They saw the movie 10 times in the theater and now they are grown up, have some money and want to collect the neat toys that they played with in their youth. Even these fans might have collected the comic books and the earliest toys, by Kenner and others, who hastily scrambled to get licenses. Many of these items came out before the first action figures, which did not appear until 1978. Nevertheless, it's the first action figures that everyone collects, and that have the highest prices. Don't you wish you bought all the figures offered in the advertisements pictured in this section—at their original prices!

Alright, you can't do that, but you can buy the current figures. There have been a lot of Star Wars red tag specials for the last two years. This was because of the vast amount of merchandise Hasbro made for Episode I The Phantom Menace and in the year before. Most toy stores wanted lots of action figures, vehicles and everything else from the new movie on their shelves, starting in early 1999. This meant that a lot of 1997 and 1998 merchandise was available at bargain prices starting after Christmas 1998 and for some years after that. The new movie was a big a hit, but not as big as the previous movies. It's harder to impress 8 year-olds today, and the movie was aimed more at 6-year-olds anyway. The real problem was that nothing could possibly have lived up to the hype and anticipation that the movie generated. Lots of merchandise was sold, but way more of it was ordered than could be sold and new toys filled the action figure aisles. Pretty soon both Power of the Force and Episode I toys were in the bargain bins.

The red tag specials for the 1997 to 1998 toys from the classic movies and for the overstocked toys from The Phantom Menace started in late 2000 and lasted for a full year. Some action figures can still be found for $1.97. Locally, Toys "R" Us stores got lots of Freeze Frame figures originally sold in early 1998 many of which were the Collection 1 ".00" figures with "Saelt-Marae" misspelled "Sealt-Marie." All 13 of the figures with this error were available and a card back with the error is pictured on page 21. Kay-Bee stores didn't get any of them, but they got some of the R2-D2 figure with the slide reading "Shutting down the Imperial trash compactor" instead of "Shutting down the Death Star trash compactor." This previously scarce variation had been selling for $200.00, but the price quickly dropped to $50.00

As if that wasn't enough, the big sell-off also featured such previously scarce, and valuable, items as Mynock Hunt "cinema scene" packs, Darth Vader Gunner Station figures, AT-ATs for $10 to $20 each, etc. etc. These bargains were not to be missed and I saw a lot of collectors in the stores who weren't missing them.

Today, there is often a substantial price difference between a figure on an [.0000] revision card and on an [.0100] or [.0200] card. I wonder whether this will continue. Some of the changes are fairly trivial. With a number of Episode I figures, the only difference is the inclusion of the Innovision logo on the back of the newer card.

Slide for R2-D2 figure with "Imperial" error (Kenner 1998)

Episode I Battle Droid without and with Innovision Logo
(.0100 and .0200 header cards) (Hasbro 1999)

Boba Fett figures got a new revision number for the change of a “,” to a “.” There were similar minor changes in cards in the classic series, but only major changes have much of an effect on price now. I expect that the price difference between many of these header cards will decrease with time. In addition, new stock of the scarce, earlier version may yet appear—it’s happened before. Try to keep these factors in mind while you consider paying big bucks for tiny differences on the back of a header card.

There will be other price convergence as well. Some of the exotic variations, such as red carded action figures with short lightsabers in a long slot, have held up well so far, but, in the final analysis, the only difference between these figures and the normal short lightsaber versions is the crease in the clear plastic figure holder inside the bubble. At least with some other variations, such as Jedi Knight Luke Skywalker, brown vest vs. black vest, there is a real difference in the figures. With the pictured figures, current prices make sense. The brown vest sells for $75, a lot more than the black vest, while the short lightsaber in the long slot is $20.00, a little less than the original long lightsaber version. However, with the Ben (Obi-Wan) Kenobi, the short lightsaber in long tray version sells for over $1,000 – way over. It’s your money, but if you pay $100 (or $1,000) today, will somebody pay you

Luke Skywalker, X-wing pilot with long lightsaber; with short lightsaber in long slot, and with short lightsaber (close-ups)
(Kenner 1995–96)

$200 (or $2,000) a few years from now? And, no, I don’t have a picture to show you—I take my own advice.

The best lesson to draw from this is not to pay $50 or $100 or $200, or whatever, for a recent figure. No matter how scarce the variation seems to be, you can’t really know for sure until all the warehouses are empty and the guys who bought all 25 of them at some local store finally sell off their stock. By then, most collectors will be looking for some new, seemingly scarce item, and the price will probably be more reasonable anyway.

What should a savvy collector like you do, to build a prime collection? Look for those bargains! Go to a lot of stores until you find the items you are missing. Use your feet (to go to a lot of places) and your eyes (to look through all the racks) and don’t pay through the nose unless you have to.

Savvy collectors will be looking in the bargain bins for vehicles and ships, both common and deluxe action figures, carry cases, and role play weapons. Deluxe creatures, 12" dolls, and store exclusives shouldn’t last long enough to get there, but you never know. Attack of the Clones figures will take their turn in the bargain bins eventually. Retailers will be smarter this time, and won’t order quite so much stock, so the sales won’t last as long.

ACTION FIGURES CHRONOLOGICAL

Early Bird Certificate Package, back (Kenner 1977)

STAR WARS: CLASSIC FIGURES

STAR WARS Kenner (1977–1986)

Time magazine picked Star Wars as the best picture of the year in a two-page feature when it opened in early summer 1977 (Time, May 30, 1977). It played to packed houses for about a year, but it has been off the big screen since 1980. The special edition, with added scenes and improved special effects, opened on January 31, 1997. For both releases, there were sequels—and action figures.

The very first Star Wars action figures arrived in 1978, in the mail. Of course, they only did so if you bought the famous Early Bird Package. The figures came in a white plastic tray in a white mailer box. There were four figures—R2-D2, Luke Skywalker, Princess Leia and Chewbacca—all individually bagged, along with a bag of plastic pegs for the display stand which was included in the Early Bird Package. Already there were variations. In the very earliest packages, Chewbacca has a dark green plastic rifle instead of the later black plastic and Luke has a telescoping lightsaber. Some people call it a double telescoping lightsaber as it not only extends out of his arm, it also telescopes out of the middle of the blade and almost reaches the floor. This version lightsaber can occasionally be found on carded Luke Skywalker and sometimes even on Darth Vader and Ben (Obi-Wan) Kenobi figures. It adds about $1,000 to the value of the Luke Skywalker figure and $2,000 to the value of the other two! It also increases the value of the loose figure, but it can be faked, even on a carded figure. For that kind of money, anything can be faked.

Early Bird “Figures” (Early 1978)

Early Bird figures R2-D2, Luke Skywalker (telescoping lightsaber, Princess Leia, and Chewbacca (green blaster rifle), in tray and box . . . $450.00

See under Carry Cases and Display Stands for listing of the Early Bird Package.

Packaging Variations—Header Cards

Star Wars action figures are heavily collected, both on their original header cards and loose. Every tiny variation in the figure or the packaging makes a difference in the price and Star Wars figures have many of both kinds of variations. The chief variation comes about because Kenner continued to produce the original figures for many years, but changed the movie logo to The Empire Strikes Back and then to Return of the Jedi as each of those new movies premiered. After the movies, figures were issued on Power of the Force header cards with a collectible coin as a premium.

12-Back header card (Kenner 1978)

In addition, most of the figures were available in the United States on foreign "Tri-Logo" header cards which had Return of the Jedi movie logos in three languages. There are variations among Tri-Logo header cards as well, but all are lumped together for pricing purposes. This means that there are four or five different packages for most figures, before you even consider the normal variations that occur in any action figure line, such as hair color or other changes to the figure and photo or text changes to the card.

Packaging Variations—Card Backs

The most significant of the header card changes involves the first group of figures to be produced, which includes all of the major characters. The cards for these figures have a picture and list on the back which shows just the original 12 figures. Consequently, these figures are called 12-backs and command the highest prices, as befits the earliest figures. Nine of the figures were released in the initial assortment and the other three—Death Squad Commander, Jawa and Sand People—were added fairly quickly. All these figures appeared on 12-back cards. Original figures on 12-back cards are scarce and desirable, so they are worth a lot more money—$75.00 to $100.00 more at current prices.

The second figure release added eight new figures and the card back was changed to reflect this, becoming 20-backs. The original 12 figures also appeared on these cards. After all, Kenner wanted you to buy all 20! The earliest of these cards are lacking the Boba Fett mail-in offer, while later issues contain the offer.

The 21st figure was the regular Boba-Fett figure and it had a 21-back card. Most collectors treat 20 and 21-back figures as part of the same series, without distinction or price difference. They are listed as 20/21-backs in this book.

The first of The Empire Strikes Back figures appeared on 31-back cards, but the earlier 21 figures were re-released on 21-back cards with The Empire Strikes Back logo. There are also figures on so-called 32-backs which are 12-back cards with a sticker listing the other 20 figures. When 10 more figures were added in the second release, the cards were changed to 41-backs.

Six more figures were added in the third The Empire Strikes Back release, but R2-D2 with Sensorscope and C-3PO with removable limbs replace the earlier versions of these figures and consequently all of them were released on 45-backs. 47-back cards came later, when two of the final figures (TIE Fighter Pilot and Zuckuss) of the third release were added. The very last figure was 4-LOM, making 48-back cards. Zuckuss actually appeared on this card, and not on the 47-back card which first listed him.

The pattern continued with the Return of the Jedi. The first use of this logo was on 48-backs, but prior to that, some 48-back cards contained a Revenge of the Jedi offer. These later cards command a premium, as does anything that mentions this title.

New Return of the Jedi figures appeared first on 65-back cards. With the second figure release came 77-backs and finally, with the addition of Lumat and Paploo, 79-backs.

Power of the Force figures only come on 92-back cards, but they do come with coins. Droids and Ewoks figures had their own cards, one per series and only the A-Wing pilot and Boba Fett figure crossed over. Otherwise they have their own group of cartoony looking figures.

Collectors, however, had Tri-Logo cards to worry about. There are a lot of variations in these cards; so many that collectors just ignore them. All tri-logo cards for a given figure sell for the same price, subject, of course, to condition.

Package Backs: 21-Back; 48-Back with Revenge of the Jedi figure offer; 92 back with coin offer (Kenner 1979–85)

Star Wars Series Figures: Ben (Obi-Wan) Kenobi (white hair) and Hammerhead (Kenner 1978)

Within each group of 12-backs, 20-backs, etc., there are variations. There are two slightly different 12-backs, eight different 20-backs, and two or more versions of most of the others, for a total of 45 different U.S. header cards.

Figure Variations

The most significant of the figure variations was with the Jawa, where the original version had a vinyl cape. This was quickly changed to cloth, which was used for all the rest of the figures. The few vinyl-caped Jawas are the most valuable of all the Star Wars figures and currently sell in the $3,500.00 range, with loose figures going for $250.00 to $300.00. Care in buying is essential, because a loose Jawa in cloth cape is only worth $15.00 and a fake vinyl cape is not hard to make.

All Star Wars action figure prices are volatile and generally increasing. This will almost certainly continue with the forthcoming release of another movie in the series.

All of the figures are listed below in the chronological order in which the various batches or groups were released. This is a shortened list, with variations only briefly noted. A much more detailed list of the figures, in alphabetical order, and with all variations described, is given in the next section of this book. Prices in each section are the same. The purpose of this chronological list is to allow you to compare the value of a given figure with the values of all the others that appeared in the same series. The alphabetical list lets you compare a figure's value with all other versions of the same figure.

THE EMPIRE STRIKES BACK

In the second movie of the series we learn the secret of Luke's parentage and meet Yoda, played by a puppet, and Lando Calrissian played by Billy Dee Williams. There are lots of new figures. Luke loses his hand, C-3PO gets chopped into pieces, Han Solo gets to cool off on the way to Jabba's palace, and Lando gets his ship and favorite Wookiee back. Not to worry, though, because before the movie is over Luke gets a new hand, C-3PO gets put back together and Lando turns out to be a good guy and not a traitor.

Lots of neat figures and vehicles were produced. They are cheap by the standards of the first series, but valuable by any other standard.

RETURN OF THE JEDI

The third movie in the series had the distinct advantage of being able to tie up all the loose ends and have the Rebels win. Solo is rescued, Jabba gets his just deserts, the new, improved, and even bigger Death Star is blown up, and the Ewoks steal the show. Everybody went home happy.

Collectors were happy too, with plenty of figures and vehicles to collect. They were even happier a couple of years later when the series had finally run its course with kids and the figures finally became red tag specials. Super Powers figures were red tag specials around the same time. You just couldn't go wrong, no matter what you bought.

There were a lot of Return of the Jedi figures produced and a number of them, particularly figures from the sixth series, were still available wholesale to comic shops and similar outlets in the early 1990s.

THE POWER OF THE FORCE

The Power of the Force figures were produced after all three movies had come and gone. Kenner wanted to keep the figure series alive and so they changed the name of the series and added silver colored aluminum coins as an in-package premium.

Without a new movie to pump-up sales, less of these figures were ordered and many that were scheduled were never made. As sales slowed, collector interest waned and the figures became red tag specials. When the collectors finally realized that they didn't have these figures, it was too late and so now they are among the most valuable of Star Wars figures. Several were released only overseas.

There were 15 new figures and 22 figures which were reissued in this series. All of them came with coins, making a total of 37 figures that came with coins. However, two of the foreign release figures (AT-AT Driver and Nikto) came with coins from other figures, so only 35 different coins came with these 37 figures. Two other foreign Power of the Force figures (Imperial TIE Fighter Pilot and FX-7) are claimed to exist in some publications and denied in others.

However, coins were also available as a mail-in premium with a proof of purchase from some prior The Empire Strikes Back and Return of the Jedi figures and so there are actually 62 coins in the series to collect. See the COINS section of this book.

TRI-LOGO (RETURN OF THE JEDI)

There is no series of figures which has the words “Tri-Logo” on it. Tri-Logo is just the universally used collector’s shorthand name for figures on header cards with Return of the Jedi logos in three languages. It is not even really a single series, as there are differences among Tri-Logo header cards depending on the countries that were the intended market for these figures. Collectors generally ignore such differences and all such cards for a given figure have the same value. Generally, a figure on a Tri-Logo card has a lower value than the same figure on any other type of card from the 1970s and 1980s.

There are foreign versions of Star Wars figures from many countries and some of them always end up in the United States, in the hands of some collectors. What makes Tri-Logo carded figures into a “domestic series” in the eyes of collectors and dealers, even though they were manufactured for foreign markets, is that they were distributed in quantity in this country at many stores. As the least desirable version of Star Wars figures and the last ones distributed, they often spent the longest time at toy stores. They were knocked onto the floor by collectors looking for scarce figures and plastered with red tag stickers. Consequently, Tri-Logo figures are often in lesser condition than those from other series, which further reduces their value. Figures on beat-up cards are often worth little more than the corresponding loose figure.

(THE TV ANIMATED SERIES)

DROIDS

"The Adventures of R2-D2 and C-3PO"

Kenner (1985)

The real movies were gone from the theaters, but there was still money to be made, so a couple of Ewok movies (The Ewok Adventure and Ewoks: The Battle For Endor) were produced, along with both an Ewoks and a Droids animated ABC television series. I didn't see any of them when they came out and they put me to sleep when I try to watch them on television now. My grandson liked them when he was four years old, but now that he is five he has outgrown them. They must do the same to just about everybody, because the figures didn't attain much of a collector following. In fact, the greatest interest in the Droids and Ewoks figures for the first ten years or so was in the coins rather than the figures. Although the coins are not part of the 62-coin regular set, they do form their own sets and sell for between $10.00 and $15.00 each. This was undeserved, because, judged on their own, the figures are not too bad. Recently, however, the figures have drawn more collector interest and now command prices in the same range as Tri-Logo figures.

One Droids figure—Boba Fett—has always been the exception; but only because he is a very popular figure from the previous lines and his Droids figure is very scarce. Collectors also want Vlix, a Droids figure produced only in Brazil, and not distributed in the United States. For the $5,000 or so he sells for, collectors would be better off flying to Brazil and looking for him there.

Another area of interest in these figures centers on the unproduced 1986 figures. There were six new Ewoks and eight new Droids advertised in Kenner's 1986 catalog, but they never appeared. Collectors are looking for prototypes, packaging proofs, and similar items for these unreleased figures. The catalog itself is also highly collectible.

LOOSE FIGURES

A lot of Star Wars figures are collected as loose figures.

Droids Figure: Artoo-Detoo (R2-D2) (Kenner 1985)

Ewok Figure: King Gorneesh (Kenner 1985)

Loose Figures: Amanaman, Bespin Security Guards Black and White, Luke Skywalker Imperial Stormtrooper (Kenner 1980–85)

This is a popular type of collecting for persons whose mothers did not throw away all their Star Wars figures when they left home. There's nothing like finding half the figures for your collection in a box in your own attic. The condition of the figure and finding the correct weapons and accessories is usually the challenge. The prices below are for near mint figures complete with original weapons and accessories. The list of recently available replacement weapons given at the end is to remind collectors that not all available weapons are "originals."

Set #2: 16 different weapons. . . . .	12.00
Replica Stormtrooper helmet . . . . .	5.00

These are not by Kenner. They are advertised in such places as Previews magazine for sale in comic shops. They include lightsabers of various colors, telescoping and regular, and just about anything else needed to complete your loose figure, if you don't have the authentic weapon. Of course, it makes it easy to fool the unsuspecting, as well. Be careful so that you do not fall into this category yourself!

Sy Snootles and the Rebo Band (Kenner 1985)

CLASSIC SERIES—MULTI-PACKS

Only one multi-pack of new figures was produced as part of the classic series—Sy Snootles and the Rebo Band. These exotic musicians came on a header card as part of the Return of the Jedi series. If it had been the '90s they would have been put out in a window box instead.

SY SNOOTLES AND THE REBO BAND

Reissue on Tri-Logo header card . . . . .	100.00
Loose: Sy Snootles, Droopy McCool or Max Rebo, each . . . . .	15.00

RE-ISSUE SETS

While no other new figures came out in multi-packs, Kenner did produce "Action Figure Sets" of three re-issue (i.e. left over) figures for each of the three movies. They were subtitled "Hero Set," "Villain Set," "Rebel Set," etc. They are quite scarce and there is some uncertainty as to their value.

Two six-pack sets of figures were issued for The Empire Strikes Back movie. These are not as valuable as the three packs. Last, and not least, Return of the Jedi two-packs were issued with leftover figures. They are worth the price of the two loose figures contained in the pack (if they have their weapons) and maybe an additional dollar or two for oddity.

STAR WARS: NEW FIGURES

THE POWER OF THE FORCE (NEW) Kenner (1995–98)

Kenner reintroduced the Star Wars action figures starting in 1995—almost two years before the release of the Star Wars Trilogy, Special Edition. Better early than late! The first item to appear was the Classic Edition 4-Pack and, in some ways, it is the functional equivalent of the Early Bird Figures from the original series—an initial four figures which are not on their own header cards.

The Classic Edition 4-Pack caused quite a bit of controversy when it first appeared because the figures were very close to being identical to the original Luke Skywalker, Han Solo, Darth Vader and Chewbacca from 1978. These original loose figures sell for over $25.00 each and there was some fear that collectors could be duped. Just enough difference between new and old was discovered so that these fears proved groundless. Now the 4-pack has risen considerably in value, so it is even less likely that someone will open one and try to pass off the new figures as the old ones.

If you find one of these 4-packs in below average condition and buy it to obtain the loose figures, don't ignore the trading cards. The cards form a distinct group of promo cards for the Star Wars Widevision trading cards series and are worth about $8.00 each or about $25.00 for the set.

Star Wars Power of the Force Classic Edition 4-Pack, including Luke Skywalker, Han Solo, Darth Vader, and Chewbacca with 4 Topps "Star Wars Widevision" special promo cards K01–K04 (#69595, July 1995) . . . . .	$60.00

The reintroduction of Star Wars action figures was a resounding success and hooked many collectors who had played with Star Wars figures as kids when they first came out. Collector interest in the original figures—always strong—got even stronger.

Packaging Variations

The most significant packaging changes in the new series is in the color of the header card. The 1995 and 1996 header cards have a red or orange laser blast running diagonally across them, while the 1997 cards have a green laser blast. Shadows of the Empire figures, from late 1996, are on purple laser blast cards. In 1998, the cards remained green, but all figures have a “Freeze Frame Action Slide.” Most 1997 green cards have a holographic picture sticker, but limited quantities of many of the figures were issued without this sticker. All green cards, and late 1996 red cards for some figures, have collection numbers at the top. In 1998, the collection numbers are at the bottom and the cards are color coded by collection. Hopefully, the following information will help you sort all of these changes out.

Package Printing Numbers

All of Kenner’s 1995–98 action figures have a small printed number on the back, at the bottom, which can be used to distinguish earlier packages from later ones. The first six digits of the number are unique to the particular figure and do not change even if the UPC code or the figure’s name are changed. It’s no doubt used at the factory to see that the figures are matched up with the correct header cards. However, it’s the two digits after the “decimal point” that collectors look at. These are package revision numbers and their function is similar to the “extension” part of a computer file name. The first version of each package is numbered “.00” and each time there is a printing change this number is increased, so that if there have been three changes, the number will read “.03” and so on. Many of the figures have had printing changes on their header cards. These range from name changes for the figure or his weapons, “Collection number” changes, and photo changes, down to correction of tiny typographical errors. All of these changes affect the value of the figure, and the earlier version is almost always the more valuable. If you are at a store or a show, and can’t remember whether the “Han Solo in Carbonite Freezing Chamber” or “Han Solo in Carbonite Block” is the scarce figure, or whether the “Collection 2” or the “Collection 3” Grand Moff Tarkin figure is the first version, just look at this code. The one you want is the one with the lower revision code, usually “.00”. However, this number only works for printing changes, not for variations in the figure itself.

*Ben (Obi-Wan) Kenobi
Long Lightsaber (Kenner 1996)*

Throughout this book, these numbers are reported in [brackets] so as to distinguish them from UPC codes, which are listed in (parentheses).

POWER OF THE FORCE (NEW)

Princess Leia was the hot early figure. She did not appear on the back of the header cards and many collectors thought she had not been released. Actually, she had been part of the original shipments and the only reason she was scarce was that every collector bought her as soon as she was spotted. Then she was not shipped for a while and prices increased still further. In the fall of 1996 she appeared again, along with Lando Calrissian from the second batch, who had also been scarce, and prices fell. Some collectors must have taken this personally, because we have seen these figures in stores with their header cards broken intentionally.

The last two figures, Jedi Knight Luke and Han Solo in Carbonite, shipped with the Shadows of the Empire figures. A wording variation was detected on the Han Solo in Carbonite package, providing some collector interest.

Figure Variations

In addition to the packaging variations, there are several important variations in the figures. The one that affects the most figures is the change from the ridiculously long early lightsabers to shorter lightsabers. This yielded variations for Darth Vader, Luke Skywalker, and Ben (Obi-Wan) Kenobi. The later figure also had a packaging change with his original head photo being replaced by a full-figure photo. If short lightsabers were not enough, some figures were found with short lightsabers in the plastic slots designed for long sabers. Luke Skywalker (Jedi Knight) originally came with a brown vest, but this was switched to black, matching the rest of his costume. Boba Fett was issued with a black circle on the back of each hand. Originally he had a bar across this circle, forming two "half-circles." A very few have even been found with a black circle on only one hand and they are very scarce, and valuable.

Except for these few popular variations, all of the figures were shipped (and purchased) in enormous quantity, keeping the price for most figures at or near the retail level.

SHADOWS OF THE EMPIRE

Shadows of the Empire figures appeared in September 1996 and were very popular. All the collectors bought them and then looked at every minute detail in an effort to spot some valuable variation. Unfortunately, none were found and none of the figures seemed to be scarce. They are based on the book series, not any of the movies.

All of the Shadows of the Empire figures were available at a few Kay-Bee stores in Dec. 1997. There were only a handful of each figure, but they stayed on the racks for several weeks. This indicated that most collectors were already well supplied and that price increases would be modest, at best. With no one looking for these figures, everyone was surprised when, in early 1998, it was reported that Princess Leia in Boushh Disguise had been reissued on a purple header card that said "Collection 1." This packaging variation has proven to be extremely scarce.

in December 1996 with the captions "Collection 1" or "Collection 2" at the top. Nobody knew what that was supposed to mean. The two collections appeared at the same time, and the earliest versions came on a header card with a red laser blast, the same color used on the other new "Power of the Force" figures from 1995–96.

These proved to be quite scarce, as the header cards were all quickly changed to a green laser blast design. Just as collectors were digesting these changes, holographic sticker pictures were added to the cards.

The Tatooine Stormtrooper (red-carded) and the Sandtrooper (green-carded) are identical—only the name had been changed to confuse the weary collector. That figure, and most of the other initial figures in Collections 1 and 2, also had changes in the name of their weapon. R5-D4 has no weapons, but a small parts warning was added and the latch was changed from straight to hooked by the time the green cards appeared.

POWER OF THE FORCE 1997

As 1997 began, the three Collection 1 and and five Collection 2 figures were appearing on green header cards with holo pictures. All of the early interest focused on the year's most popular figure, Princess Leia as Jabba's Prisoner. This scantily-clad number initially sold for $15.00 to $20.00 as all of the early ones were grabbed by eager collectors or dealers. However, more appeared and the price started to fall. As still more arrived and the figure became common, the price fell to be the same as the other figures.

Many new figures appeared in both Collection 1 and Collection 2, and figures for Collection 3 started to arrive. Some of these early 1997 figures were shipped in staggering quantities and figures such as Bib Fortuna, Emperor Palpatine, Lando Calrissian Skiff Guard, Bossk, 2-1B, Admiral Ackbar, 4-LOM, and Grand Moff Tarkin were mind-numbingly common.

Collection Numbers

The idea of the "collection number" was to sort the action figures into groups so that "Collection 1" would be the Rebel Alliance, "Collection 3" would be the Galactic Empire and "Collection 2" would be the various non-aligned aliens. The point of all this, and the real idea, was that the boxes shipped to the stores would indicate which collection was in the box and so the store would have to devote space for all three collections and there would always be a wide variety for sale—plenty of Rebels, plenty of Aliens and plenty of Imperial forces.

Unfortunately, there weren't equal numbers of each type, and new figures were not added at uniform rates in each group, but almost all boxes have to contain 16 figures. Except for the occasional "Block Case" of all one figure, Kenner doesn't ship more than three of any one figure in any assortment, and usually it's no more than two.

The result was that a lot of figures came out in the "wrong" collection and later in the "right" collection. The seven most important (i.e. valuable) collection "errors" are Grand Moff Tarkin, Luke Skywalker Jedi Knight, Luke Skywalker in Ceremonial outfit Ponda Baba, Rebel Fleet Trooper, Weequay Skiff Guard, and Yoda, all of whom came out first in Collection 2, but were soon switched to other collections (Luke in Ceremonial, Luke Jedi Knight, Yoda, and Rebel Fleet Trooper, Collection 1; other three to Collection 3). All of these are quite difficult to find in the error collection and are worth about three to four times as much as they are with the correct number.

The next most valuable error is Boba Fett from Collection 1, which sell for about 50% more than the correct Collection 3 version. The other collection errors: Hoth Rebel Soldier, AT-ST driver, Han Solo Carbonite, Luke in Hoth Gear, TIE-Fighter Pilot, and Yoda, all from Collection 2 together with Emperor Palpatine, Darth Vader, and Bib Fortuna from Collection 1 have proven to be fairly easy to find and command only a small premium. Overall, that's 17 collection error figures to look for.

Peg Holes and Stand-Up Bubbles

There are two other packaging variations that you can see on the 1995–97 figure line by looking at the peg holes used for hanging the figures and at the plastic bubbles on the card.

Around June 1997, or so, figures started showing up with a slightly wider hook-shaped hanging slot cut out at the top of the package. This lets that scarce figure at the back of the store's hanging peg easily fall off right into your hands (and the figures next to it fall off onto the floor). The easiest place to notice this difference is to look at the horizontal length of the slot, and particularly at the downward hanging part of the header card that remains. It's about 25% wider than the original.

Around the same time, figures appeared with an altered plastic bubble. The original plastic bubble is a simple rectangular box with slightly tapered sides so that the box is slightly smaller at the top, than at the base. The new plastic bubble has a more pronounced slant at the top, but the big change is at the bottom. An outward slanting secondary bubble has been added to the shape, so that the carded figure will stand up if placed on a flat surface.

Holo Stickers or Plain Picture

A holo sticker picture was added to the header cards about the time that they switched from red/orange to green. The very earliest green cards were for the three “Collection 1” and five “Collection 2” figures that appeared briefly on red header cards. The first boxes of these green-carded figures had plain pictures of the characters on the front, similar to the ones used on all the red cards. Soon, these green-carded figures and all the subsequent ones had holographic picture stickers over the plain picture. Initially the holographic stickers could be removed (carefully) to reveal the plain picture underneath. No one noticed that the holo stickers had different glue starting in about July 1997 and could no longer be removed without leaving a residue and making a few bubbles in the cardboard underneath. Figures would occasionally show up without the holo sticker and in early 1998, when the green cards were about to be phased out in favor of the Freeze Frame cards, a large number of tail-end green cards showed up without holo pictures. Probably Kenner ran out of the holo pictures and didn’t want to print more.

The differences in peg holes, bubbles, and presence or absence of a holo sticker are all legitimate packaging variations and not errors. Initially there were even price differences, but today there are none. There is a lesson here. The lesson is “Don’t pay too much for that supposedly scarce variation, it may not matter much in the end.” Go look for it in the stores, where you won’t pay a premium if you find it.

As the packaging changes occurred, collectors started to notice changes in the eight-digit number codes on the package back. The code for the first issue of any figure ended in “.00” and as the package changed, the code changed to “.01” and “.02” while the first six digits stayed the same, even when the figure got a new UPC code. Actually these codes appeared on the packages from 1995 on, but collectors had not paid any attention to them until 1997 when the large number of packaging changes made their function, and usefulness, clear. These printing/package codes are noted in this book in [brackets] to distinguish them from UPC codes, which are noted in (parentheses).

Figure Variations

Boba Fett occasionally comes with the same “black circle on one hand” or other scarce variations that occurred in the red cards, while Ponda Baba has been found with a grey beard instead of the normal black bird. These and a few other variations have had the most significant effect on price. However, Han Solo in Endor Gear changed his pants color from Navy blue (almost black) to brown, but this has not affected its value. These variations are covered more thoroughly in the Action Figure—Alphabetical section.

Summary

With so many variations, what do you look for? Start with the three figures on Collection 1 and five figures on Collection 2 transition red cards, and the scarce figures on cards with the “wrong” collection numbers. Basically, you can never go wrong with a package having printing number “.00.” Pay no attention to changes in the peg hooks and bubbles and to any card variation after “.01.” Many of the card printing changes from the original “.00” card to the corrected “.01” are quite trivial and where both cards are generally available, there is little difference in price. This variation seems most likely to mirror the variation between 20-back to 21-back cards from the original series.

Bib Fortuna, Collection 1, Luke Skywalker in Hoth Gear, Collection 2 and Ponda Baba, Collection 3 (Kenner 1997)

Enough plain picture figures were issued so that there is no difference in value between the plain and holo picture versions. If you are like me, you think that the plain picture is more attractive, so you look for it anyway.

POWER OF THE FORCE 1998

The new header card packaging for 1998 added a 35mm Freeze Frame Action Slide as an in-package premium and color codes the "Collection Number" (Red for Collection 1, Yellow for Collection 2 and Blue for Collection 3) on a strip at the bottom of the package. The color code stripes were a great help in separating new packages from old ones in the early days. Loose figures do not include the 35mm slide. In-package premiums are a separate collectible once they are removed from the package.

Just about every beast, accessory, and vehicle issued in 1998 came with an exclusive figure.

The high points of the 1998 figures included the first Biggs Darklighter figure, Darth Vader in removable helmet, with his finely sculpted head revealed, Captain Piett, Ishi Tib, Mon Mothma, and the Expanded Universe figures.

The first batch of Freeze Frame Action Slide Collection 1 figures arrived on schedule in February 1998. Happily or unhappily, they all had a printing error and so corrected versions, with new printing numbers arrived quickly as well. The error is on the back of the header card, under the picture of Jabba and Han, where weary collectors are advised to "Collect all these Star Wars Action Figures." In the list that follows, "Saelt-Marae" is misspelled as "Sealt-Marie"—two errors in just 10 letters. The error is the same on all packages and the corrected version has the higher printing number: ".01" versus ".00" for the new figures and other numbers on the reissues.

This series of figures has been very popular with collectors. Distribution was spotty and some reissue figures were very hard to track down. Prices are generally higher than prices for the 1997 figures. However, a large supply of many of the figures appeared at local stores in March and April 2000. Prices fell as all of the Collection 1 figures with the "Sealt Marie" printing error were available, along with such scarce figures as the new R2-D2 with the "Imperial trash compactor" slide.

3-D PLAYSCENE (Expanded Universe) Kenner (1998)

These figures are from the comics, video games, and novels figures, and not from the movies. They were released in November 1998, and include Mara Jade and Grand Admiral Thrawn, from Heir to the Empire, and Kyle Katarn, from Dark Forces. They are very popular with collectors. No one has reported finding figures with “.00” revision numbers, and the numbers listed are the earliest known.

Flashback Photo figures came with a detachable pull-down photo which showed the figure from the original movies, and, when pulled down, showed the same or a related figure from the (then) forthcoming Episode I movie. These revealed some essential plot points for that movie, such as that Queen Amidala is Luke and Leia’s mother.

The first wave of eight figures appeared in November 1998, and a second wave of three new figures came out in June 1999. They have four digit revision numbers, as do their Flashback Photos. Even the Flashback Photos have variations. The earlier ones have a down-arrow on the front and back of the pull-tab, while later ones have an up-arrow and a down-arrow on the front and no arrow on the back.

COMMTECH CHIP Hasbro (1999)

CommTech Chip Figures appeared with a new batch of Star Wars figures in 1999. These are the same types of chips used on the Episode I figures listed below. Hasbro has not given up on selling the classic characters just because it has a whole new movie to work with. The chips had either a chrome or a white background.

The R2-D2 figure with holographic Princess Leia was supposed to have been omitted briefly because of production problems. Between hoarding and “briefly,” most collectors can’t find it at all. Princess Leia was designated as “Princess Leia Hood Up” on Hasbro’s Web site, but not on the figure. Wuher was originally a Star Wars Insider magazine exclusive, but was later available in stores.

STAR WARS: EPISODE I FIGURES

STAR WARS EPISODE I— THE PHANTOM MENACE Hasbro (1999–2000)

“A generation before Star Wars: A New Hope .... In a galaxy far, far away, an evil force is gaining strength and threatens an entire civilization. Two courageous Jedi, a young queen, a Gungan outcast, and a slave boy named Anakin, band together to save a planet under attack as the fate of the galaxy hangs in the balance.”

The long, long awaited movie starred Jake Lloyd as young Anakin Skywalker, Ewan McGregor as a younger Obi-Wan Kenobi, Liam Neeson as Qui-Gon Jinn, and Natalie Portman as the teenage Queen Amidala. Anthony Daniels and Kenny Baker came back as C-3PO and R2-D2. Jar Jar Binks was voiced by Ahmed Best, but was completely computer generated. Supporting characters included Samuel L. Jackson as Mace Windu, Terence Stamp as Supreme Chancellor Valorum, and Brian Blessed as Boss Nass.

The Phantom Menace toy avalanche began on May 3, 1999 and most stores opened just after midnight to lines of eager collectors. Stock was adequate and most of the figures were still available the following morning and for a few days. The figures sold well and many Toys “R” Us stores pulled their few remaining figures and had none for about a week to preserve stock for a previously scheduled pre-Memorial Day sale. Many secondary outlets such as drug stores and even grocery stores carried figures and they just kept coming.

*Mace Windu, Episode I Sneak Preview

Initial figures were shipped to toy stores in three “collections.” Collections two and three came in boxes containing 16 figures, with five different figures in each box. Collection one came in a double length box of 32 figures with eight different. However, the Battle Droids came in four different design patterns and collectors naturally wanted one of each color. This turned out to be a good move as packaging changes made the earliest versions of the figures, with revision numbers ending in “.00”, fairly scarce. Many stores only got “Collection 1” figures such as Battle Droids with revision numbers ending in “.0100”. Even these proved to be worthwhile investments as package revision “.0200” was on the shelves within a month.

There were 16 additional figures added to the mix over the next year or so. None of these had package revisions, but there were some very scarce variations to look for. Common versions of all these figures were produced in huge quantities and remained on retailers’ racks for years. Many can still be found for under $2.00.

This glut of unsold figures greatly reduced the production and distribution of the final 13 figures and they remain quite scarce. This fact is well known by toy store employees,

Obi-Wan Kenobi (Jedi Duel) Episode I (Kenner 1999)

so they buy up any final figures as soon as they hit the racks and sell them to dealers or at shows.

POWER OF THE JEDI Hasbro (2000–2002)

Power of the Jedi figures include characters from all four movies. They come with a “Jedi Force File” which is an eight page fold-out. The header card is generic and does not contain anything that identifies the figure—the character’s name is only printed on the front of the Jedi Force File and the UPC bar code is on a sticker on the back. The card revision number is still present, but the only revisions are to the names and photos of the other available figures which are listed on the back. Most of the figures are available on two or more different header cards, but they are not necessarily in sequence. A given figure may well appear on an “.0100” and on a “.0400” card but not on a “.0200” or “.0300” card.

POWER OF THE JEDI (TRANSITION)

Starting in 2002, Hasbro dropped the “Jedi Force File” fold-out from the Power of the Jedi header card design and printed the character’s name on the front. The back was changed to contain the character biographical information. For lack of a better name, these are called “Transition” header cards. Since the cards are no longer generic, the package revision number no longer works the same as on earlier figures in the Power of the Jedi line-up. The decimal point has been dropped and the last four digits now seem to represent distinct character numbers. The first ones seen include figures with numbers “0000” thru “0500” respectively.

LOOSE FIGURES

Only a few exotic variations and some scarce recent figures, have attained any collector value as “loose figures.” Exotic variations are so rare that no accepted market price is known. The merely “scarce” figures are listed below. All the other common figures are worth about $3.00. The only reason that they cost that much is that a dealer has to transport them to the show or advertise, take your order, and ship them to you, and needs some compensation for his time. If you are trying to sell your loose common figures you better not expect to get much for them. All loose figure prices include the weapons and accessories which came with the figure.

LOOSE FIGURES FROM VEHICLES, CREATURES & PLAYSETS

Many of the new Power of the Force vehicles came with exclusive figures. Starting in 1998, it was hard to find a vehicle without one. The most interesting of these exclusives is the Wedge Antilles error figure. The first batches of the Millennium Falcon carry case came with a Wedge Antilles with a white stripe down each arm. This was clearly visible as the figure can be seen in the gun turret of the ship. Later batches of these carry cases corrected the figure.

Exclusive figures from vehicles, creatures and playsets

AT-AT Driver and AT-AT Commander from AT-AT vehicles
(Kenner 1997)

Sebulba and Anakin Skywalker from Episode I Podracer vehicles (Kenner 1999–2000)

are rather scarce, in loose condition, since relatively few were issued compared with regular carded figures. However, many of the vehicles, creatures, playsets, games, etc. were themselves discounted substantially, making the figures available at a good price. Loose figures from multi-figure packs are listed with the packs and would be worth a lot less individually than in their original group.

MAIL-IN EXCLUSIVE FIGURES

There have been quite a few mail-in exclusive figures in the new series. The first to be offered was the Froot Loops mail-in Han Solo in Stormtrooper disguise. Both the cereal box and the figure are collectible. Since this offer was not tied to any Star Wars event or product, many collectors missed it. By contrast, the Spirit of Obi-Wan Kenobi mail-in from Frito Lay was tied to the theater release of the Special Editions of the movies in early 1997. Hardly anyone was unaware of it. The figure can not truly be said to be an action figure as it is not articulated, but Kenner treats it as one on its Web site and collectors have generally considered it so, as well.

The theater edition Jedi Knight Luke Skywalker is the most valuable of the exclusive figures. It was given away during the first showing of the Special Edition of Star Wars, A New Hope on January 31, 1997. There was no prior announcement, not all theaters got the figure and there was no sign of any such figure when I saw the picture at 7:00 p.m. that day. A number of alert movie theater ushers and ticket takers did quite well for themselves by taking home a supply. The figure is identical to the common version sold in stores—only the header card is different.

MILLENNIUM MINTED COIN COLLECTION Kenner (1998)

The original Power of the Force coins are a popular collectible and Kenner is bringing them back in 1998 in the

Bespin Han Solo, Millennium Minted Coin (Kenner 1998)

Millennium Minted Coin Collection series. Each figure in the series comes with a gold-colored coin mounted on a display pedestal. Figures and coins are packaged in a window box which has a back window so you can see the back of the coin. The back of the coin is different from the back of the original coins, so even someone who doesn't notice that the original coins are silver-colored should still be able to tell them apart. The initial boxes appeared in early April and included just three different figures. The combination costs about $10.00, which is about $3.00 to $4.00 more than the figure alone. This seems about right, but a lot of collectors are reluctant to buy still another version of a character that they already own.

DELUXE FIGURES

Deluxe figures have met with a decidedly mixed review among collectors and in collector publications. None of the weapons/accessories in these packages appeared in the movie. When the first deluxe figure featured a "Capture Claw," many purists feared that Kenner would start issuing figures with every manner of absurd gear, as they have done with Batman. Fortunately, no Deluxe Ninja Luke Skywalker was planned. Only a few of the deluxe figures have been created, and they follow the basic concept behind the Mini-Rigs from the original series which was to sell weapons and accessories that fit in with the ones featured in the film and could be envisioned as "just off camera."

The next three deluxe figures featured popular characters with somewhat unmovie-like devices, but the last three (Probe Droid, Snowtrooper, and Hoth Rebel Soldier) came much closer to the basic concept and were much more popular with collectors. Other one- and two-man weapons, radar and communication stations, loading dock, cargo handling, refueling and repair droids, and equipment would also fit the concept and these could have included soldiers for each side as well. However, the kids probably prefer weapons and accessories associated with the major characters. Anyway, the deluxe figures have turned out to be among the few Star Wars items that I have seen discounted, so both Kenner and collectors may be lucky that only seven different ones were made.

For 1998, Kenner added to, or replaced this line-up with Gunner Station figures. The first two were Han and Luke plus the guns from the Millennium Falcon which they used in the first movie. These were eventually given something to shoot at with the addition of Darth Vader and his TIE Fighter. They must have been good shots, because Darth Vader was very hard to find, although he did turn up briefly at red tag time.

Episode I deluxe figures came with a handle which allowed you to swing their lightsabers around. They were among the first figures to be discounted and you can still find some of them around almost three years later.

Power of the Jedi deluxe figures have more promise. They come with accessories which are actually seen in the movies such as a Bacta Tank (with Luke) and a Sail Barge Cannon (with Leia). Neither of these have previously appeared in the action figure line. The packages for the figures do not say "Deluxe" anywhere, but they follow the same concept of a figure plus a large accessory.

ELECTRONIC FIGURES

With electronic figures you can add "bells and whistles" to your action figure – literally. The only one that actually does this is the Electronic Power F/X R2-D2 figure. It's one of my favorite loose figures. The others all just add lights.

ELECTRONIC POWER F/X

Kenner (1997)

There are five Electronic Power F/X figures and all of them, except R2-D2, come with a light-up feature and an action feature controlled by hidden buttons and levers. The packages have diorama scenes which can be cut out and the first two figures, Ben and Darth, interconnect to allow a simulated duel. Luke can also connect with Darth for a duel, but not with the Emperor, who is facing the wrong way. The first version of the Emperor's package pictures his energy bolts shooting up, but the corrected version pictures them shooting down. In the movie scene, Luke was taking his punishment lying on the deck, not flying around the room like Peter Pan.

LARGER FIGURES

Bespin Luke Skywalker,
Epic Force (Kenner 1998)

EPIC FORCE

These 5" figures were introduced at the 1998 Toy Fair. Other than the size, the gimmick is the rotating base, which lets the collector see all sides of the figure without removing it from the package. Three figures appeared at first, and Boba Fett is the most desirable figure of the three, but it is not scarce. C-3PO arrived in late May. Each package back pictures three figures—C-3PO plus the other two from the initial batch of three. However, there were five figures announced for the initial batch and there is no sign of Han Solo Stormtrooper which was supposed to be the fifth figure. Instead we got an ordinary Stormtrooper.

MULTI-PACKS

There are two different ways to create a Multi-Packs. The first is to put two or more figures in the same package, and the second is to put two or three regular carded figures in an outer package. Kenner/Hasbro has tried both methods, with mixed results. The most popular to date are the "Cinema Scenes" three-packs.

One thing they should have tried, but did not, was to package a squad of Stormtroopers or Battle Droids so that loose figure collectors could complete their armies at a reasonable price. Why not a squad of three plus an exclusive officer figure, for the "Cinema Scenes" line – four figures for the price of three?

"CINEMA SCENES" THREE-PACKS

Kenner (1997–2000)

The "Cinema Scenes" three-packs first appeared in June 1997 with the Death Star Escape group. Although Kenner calls them "Cinema Scenes" packs, this phrase doesn't appear anywhere on the package, but the back of the package contains a scene from the movie, with sprocket holes down each side to look like a piece of 70mm film. They are collected, in part, because each one contains at least one figure that is not otherwise available.

The Death Star Escape was a Toys "R" Us exclusive and included a Han Solo Stormtrooper figure which had only been released as the Froot Loops mail-in. The Cantina Showdown was a WalMart exclusive, at least at first, and included the never-before released Dr. Evazan. The third group featured the first-ever versions of Jabba's Dancers. Later packages had not one, but all three exclusive figures. The Mynock Hunt is notoriously scarce, although it was available at Kay-Bee stores in quantity for a while.

Three-packs are produced in much smaller quantities than carded figures, contain from one to three exclusive figures, and retail for the same price as three separate figures, making them a pretty good deal.

TWO-PACKS

SHADOWS OF THE EMPIRE Kenner (1996)

One package variation showed up in the Shadows of the Empire two-packs. Boba Fett vs. IG-88 packages with printing code ".01" stated on the back that Boba Fett's "Vehicle of Choice:" was the "Slave I." This was the final line in his description, after "Weapon of Choice" Earlier packages, with printing code ".00" omitted the phrase "Vehicle of Choice:"

Princess Leia and Han Solo, Princess Leia Collection; and Han Solo and Chewbacca, Silver Anniversary (Kenner 1998; Hasbro 2002)

but did include the words “Slave I.”

PRINCESS LEIA COLLECTION Kenner (1998)

With four new outfits and four new hairstyles, the Princess could launch her own signature clothing collection for women who are well proportioned, but a little shorter than the average super-model. The white outfit she is wearing with R2-D2 is a little austere, but the same material looks quite handsome in the low-cut version with see-through cape shown with Luke Skywalker and it is nicely accessorized with belt and silver necklace. Her hair includes a single braid that hangs down a little below her derriere. The Endor outfit, shown with Wicket, is a casual number, with designer tears up the front which show a little thigh in combat. She also sports two long, below-waist length braids (on her head) and long hair from the Ewok Celebration Outfit figure. With Han Solo she is wearing a maroon dress, with a floor-length lace top attached to white shoulder pads which extend all the way up to her chin. The only difference between the “.00” and “.01” package backs is the color of the names on the file card – black on the “.00” and red on the “.01” figures.

WHOLESALE CLUB PACKS

These are three figures, in original packages, with an outer corrugated cardboard package with holes so the original packages show through. They are sold to various "wholesale club" stores, where they generally sell to members (customers) at a small discount from the prevailing toy store price for three figures. So far there have been two groups of three sets of these three-packs. There does not seem to be a lot of collector interest in them to date, with one exception, probably because the included figures are all common and the packs appeared much later than the original release of the figures. The one exception is the group two pack which contains a reissue Lando Calrissian on a green header card. This scarce version was never sold separately.

CARRY CASES AND DISPLAY STANDS

The first display stand for Kenner's Star Wars action figures was available well before the first figures appeared. It was the one included in the Early Bird Certificate Package. Actually, the package only held the backdrop. The pegs to hold the figures came in the package with the Early Bird figures.

The Star Wars Action Display Stand was the first of many mail-away premiums. It was offered on Star Wars action figure cardbacks for two proofs of purchase plus $2.00. The stand has a plastic base and a cardboard backdrop, plus levers that rotate groups of figures. It originally came in a plain mailer box. Later the stand was offered in Star Wars packaging, and finally, in The Empire Strikes Back packaging, with six figures, as the Special Action Display Stand.

The Star Wars Display Arena also a mail-away premium and consisted of four L-shaped plastic stands and four reversible cardboard backdrops, with pegs for display of up to 14 action figures.

COLLECTOR CASES

Vinyl Collector's Cases were offered in packaging for each of the movies in turn. The cases each have two storage trays designed to hold 12 figures each. The backsides had foot pegs and could be used to display your figures. There were stickers for the figures so each one would know where it lived. Later, the Darth Vader and C-3PO head-shaped cases along with the Laser Rifle carry case and even the Chewbacca Bandolier Strap proved to be more popular designs, making the rather plain Collector's Case much more common in Star Wars packaging than in packaging for the later two films.

New carry cases appeared along with the return of the figures in 1995. Generally they have a gimmick. The Millennium Falcon-shaped carry case came with a Wedge Antilles figure which was visible in the gun turret. At first the figure had white arm decorations, which did not match the uniform in the movie. Collectors and Kenner seemed to have noticed this about the same time and when later shipments corrected the error, collectors searched for the original figures. However, a lot of the originals are in circulation, which has moderated the dealer price.

ACTION FIGURES ALPHABETICAL

ACTION FIGURES: ALPHABETICAL

Kenner/Hasbro (1978–2002)

This section lists every Star Wars action figure which has appeared on a header card from 1978 through the first quarter of 2002. The listing is alphabetical by the characters current name and all versions of the same character are listed together. This means that characters which appeared in the original series under names such as “Yak Face” and “Hammerhead” are now listed under their new names, “Saelt-Marae” and “Momaw Nadon” and that “Jedi Knight Luke Skywalker” is listed under “Luke Skywalker.” There are three versions of Anakin Skywalker, called “Old” for the one revealed in Return of the Jedi, “Child” for the one played by Jake Lloyd in Episode I, and “Young Adult” for the one from Attack of the Clones. Darth Vader is treated as a separate character. There is one exception: Ben (Obi-Wan) Kenobi is used for the old character played by Alec Guinness in the classic trilogy, while Obi-Wan Kenobi is used for the younger character played by Ewan McGregor in Episodes I and II. Cross references are given under the original names. There are many versions of the major characters and Kenner/Hasbro has not always been consistent in naming them. This, and collector short-hand, has led to popular names such as Leia “Slave Girl” which are used in advertisement from dealers, but do not appear on the figures. The listings below are organized by true name, but the popular name is given in the descriptions.

Figure and packaging variations which are specific to a given figure are described below, under that figure’s listing. Major packaging changes and packaging variations which are common to many figures in a given series were described above in the chronological listings section.

ADI GALLIA

Jedi Knight and one of 12 members of the Jedi Council who votes on whether to train Anakin Skywalker as a Jedi.

Episode I:

Adi Gallia with “Lightsaber” (#84124) Col. 3
[562934.0000] . . . . . $12.00
Loose, with red lightsaber . . . . . 3.00

ADMIRAL ACKBAR

Admiral Ackbar of the Rebel Alliance Fleet is a Mon Calamari and stands 1.88 meters tall. He was captured when the Empire invaded his home planet and served as a slave to Grand Moff Tarkin. He escaped during a Rebel attack and joined the Rebel Alliance, where he was instrumental in the design of the B-Wing Fighter. Promoted to Admiral, he first appears in Return of the Jedi as a senior Rebel Alliance adviser. He commands the attack on the second Death Star during the Battle of Endor.

His figure carried a staff in the classic series and was initially available as a mail-in. The new figure carries a wrist blaster.

Reissue, with "Wrist Blaster" on a Freeze Frame header card (#69696) [.01] . . . . .	12.00
Loose, with black wrist blaster . . . . .	3.00

ADMIRAL MOTTI

"The senior Imperial Commander in charge of operations on the original Death Star, Admiral Motti often disagreed with the decisions of Darth Vader. His outspokenness almost cost him his life when Vader used the Force to strangle the Admiral into silence." You would have thought that he'd already have figured this out before he made Admiral.

New Power of the Force:

Admiral Motti with "Imperial Blaster" on green CommTech header card (#84366, 2000) [.00] . . .	$30.00
Loose, with Imperial Blaster . . . . .	15.00

AMANAMAN

This yellow and green reptile carries a skull staff where it keeps the skulls of fugitives it hunts down. He was originally available in the Jabba the Hutt Dungeon playset from Sears. The head hunter was a popular collectible, and appeared as Fans' Choice Figure #2 in the Power of the Jedi line. It was issued on a special deluxe figure sized header card without a Jedi Force File fold-out.

Classic:

ANAKIN SKYWALKER (OLD)

The Anakin Skywalker figure has the gray and tan robes and benevolent face from the days before he was seduced by the dark side of the Force. His character reverted to this form after his death in Return of the Jedi. He is treated as a separate character from Darth Vader. Loose figures were available as a mail-in, but packaged figures are all foreign, which accounts for the large disparity in price. He's a lot cheaper in the newer version.

Classic:

ASP-7

The ASP-7 droid is a domestic and industrial laborer. It is 1.6 meters tall. The figure comes with a small bundle of supply rods. This droid is from the new Special Edition footage and was not produced in the original figure line.

New Power of the Force:

ASP-7 Droid with "Spaceport Supply Rods" "Newly-Created Footage" sticker, on green holo header card (Collection 2, #69704, July 1997) [540899.00] with 2nd hook, in stand-up bubble . . $10.00
 Loose, with olive drab supply rod bundle . . . . . 3.00

AT-AT COMMANDER

The AT-AT (All Terrain Armored Transport) Walker is both a weapons platform and a troop transport. Each takes two pilots. The Commander acts as navigator and gunner.

In the new series, an exclusive AT-AT Commander and AT-AT Driver are included with the Electronic AT-AT vehicle, and a 12" doll was released in 1997.

Classic:

AT-ST DRIVER

The AT-ST (All Terrain Scout Transport) Driver is a human Imperial Ground-Assault pilot. He averages 1.8 meters tall.

The first AT-ST Driver issued in the new series came on a Collection 2 header card. This was corrected to Collection 3. There is only a slight premium for the original header card.

AUNT BERU

Aunt Beru and Uncle Owen have a moisture farm on Tatooine where Luke is stuck, doing chores, while dreaming of going to the Academy with Biggs and becoming a big-shot pilot. Both get killed when the Stormtroopers raid their farm looking for R2-D2 and the Death Star plans.

Beru got her own figure, while Owen was included in the Purchase of the Droids Cinema Scenes three-pack.

BARADA

Barada was a Klatoonian slave of Jabba the Hutt. He was the first one killed in the battle at the Sarlacc's pit.

Barada also came with the Jabba the Hutt Dungeon playset from Sears. He has not yet appeared in the new series of figures, except as one of Jabba's Skiff Guards in the Cinema Scenes three-pack.

BATTLE DROID

Manufactured by Bactoid Combat Automation for the Trade Federation, they are no match for Jedi, but kick Gungan butt until their Control Ship is destroyed.

It's a good thing that so many Episode I figures were available at discount, because the Battle Droids' heads come off easily and tend to get lost. This does leave a large supply of battle damaged Battle Droids available, but if this isn't enough, Hasbro has now released one that shows the type of damage caused by the Gungan army at the battle of Naboo.

BEN (OBI-WAN) KENOBI (OLD)

Two versions of Obi-Wan's head were made in the classic figure series, one with gray hair and one with white hair. They are about equally scarce (or equally common) and there is little or no difference in price between the two versions.

The really scarce figure variation is the telescoping lightsaber which came with just a few of the earliest versions of Luke Skywalker, Darth Vader and this figure. It adds about $2,000 to Obi-Wan's value, but beware of fakes, even on carded figures.

The header card photo was changed during the Return of the Jedi figure series. The original photo shows a bare-headed Obi-Wan facing left and holding a yellow lightsaber, which is pointing to the upper left. The new photo shows a hooded Obi-Wan facing forward and holding a blue lightsaber which is pointing to the upper right.

In the new figure series, Obi-Wan's photo on the back of the header card ".00" was changed from from a head and shoulders photo to a full figure photo on the ".01" card. In addition, a spelling error was corrected when "an" was changed to "and". More significantly, his lightsaber was shortened, along with Luke's and Darth's, resulting in two different versions of his figure.

Classic:

BESPIN SECURITY GUARD

The 1980 version of the Bespin Security Guard had white skin and the 1982 version (same name, different UPC code) had black skin. They are meant to be different figures and the packages have different photos, but neither package uses the words "black" or "white." These names have been added by collectors and dealers to distinguish between the figures. The white figure can also be found with slightly yellowish skin and a slightly longer, but not quite Fu Manchu-style mustache. The price is the same in either case. The white Bespin Security Guard also came with the Cloud Car vehicle.

BIB FORTUNA

Bib Fortuna is a Twi'lek from the planet Ryloth and serves as Jabba the Hutt's majordomo.

He first appears in the new series of figures on a Collection 1 header card, but this was changed to Collection 2. The original Collection 1 card is not especially scarce and carries only a slight premium over the more common Collection 2.

BIGGS DARKLIGHTER

Biggs Darklighter is a Tatooine native and childhood friend of Luke. He is the famous missing character of the original Star Wars movie because his scenes with Luke at the beginning of the movie were cut and all you saw was his death at the hands of Darth Vader. The Special Edition restored a brief reunion scene with Luke, just before they both took off in their X-Wing fighters to attack the Death Star.

He did not appear among the classic figures, but he was a popular character with figure customizers.

New Power of the Force:

Biker Scout (Kenner 1983 and 1985)

BIKER SCOUT (TROOPER)

One of several types of Imperial pilots which appeared in the classic series, but has only been sold with a vehicle in the new series. He is not a highly sought figure in either of these series. In the Power of the Jedi series the name was changed to "Scout Trooper" but just about everybody uses the old name. A variant version of the recent figure shows dirt on the armor to represent battle damage.

BOBA FETT

Boba Fett is a notorious bounty hunter. Darth Vader hired him to track down Han Solo's ship in order to lure Luke Skywalker out into the open. Han Solo was his reward and Jabba the Hutt paid handsomely for Solo.

In the original series, Boba Fett also came as an early mail-in figure. It was advertised with a spring-loaded rocket back pack missile, but this was a child safety hazard and was never shipped. A few prototypes exist and are extremely valuable. See "Mail-Ins" in the previous section for a listing of this, and other classic mail-in figures.

your favorite bounty hunter facing forward in front of a starry background. The new photo shows him facing to the left, armed to the teeth in front of a blue sky.

The Tri-Logo version of Boba Fett is somewhat different from the versions on other header cards. The plastic is lighter in weight, the comb below the right knee is unpainted and the rocket is shorter and in a matte finish. In the domestic version of Boba Fett he is heavier, has the comb on his right knee painted the same color as the knee band and has a rocket with a glossy finish. Also, the Tri-Logo figures chest plate is a darker green and the shoulder and knee highlights are darker brown than those on the domestic figure.

In the new series of figures, Boba Fett initially came with a black disk painted on the back of each hand that was bisected by a bar that is the same color as the rest of the hand. This appears as two half-moons or half-circles. Later versions of the figure have a complete black disk or full-circle. The half-circle version is scarce and valuable. A comma after the word "Empire" on the ".00" header card was corrected to a period on the ".01" header card. It returned to a comma on the ".02" and ".03" cards.

BOSSK

Bosk is a freelance Trandoshan bounty hunter. His specialty is catching Wookiees and he first appears in The Empire Strikes Back.

His was the famous "secret figure" offered as a mail-in at the end of the original Star Wars figure series.

Classic:

Bosk (Bounty Hunter) (#39760, 1980)
Original The Empire Strikes Back header card . . . . .	$125.00
Reissue on Return of the Jedi header card . . . . .	75.00
Reissue on Tri-Logo header card . . . . .	55.00

With holo picture [.01] and 2nd hook, with stand-up bubble . . . . .	12.00
Loose, with light gray rifle and pistol . . . . .	3.00

BOSS NASS

As Ruler of the Gungans, he alone can summon the Grand Army to battle, which he does to help rid Naboo of the Trade Federation army. Why he appoints Jar Jar Binks a general is another matter.

Episode I:

Boss Nass with "Gungan Staff" (#84119) Col. 3 [558996.0000] . . . . .	$8.00
Reissue [.0100] . . . . .	7.00

Reissue [.0100] . . . . .	10.00
Loose, without equipment . . . . .	3.00

B-WING PILOT

This has never been a highly sought figure. He comes in a nifty red jumpsuit.

Classic:

B-Wing Pilot (#71280, 1984)
Original Return of the Jedi header card . . . . .	$30.00
Reissue on Power of the Force header card . . . . .	30.00
Reissue on Tri-Logo header card . . . . .	30.00
Loose, with pistol . . . . .	10.00

New: See B-Wing vehicle

CAPTAIN PANAKA

Head of Royal Security for Queen Amidala. The trouble is, it's mostly a volunteer force, with no real chance to defend Naboo against the Trade Federation droid army.

Episode I:

Captain Panaka with "Blaster Rifle and Pistol" (#84108) Col. 2 [562928.0000] . . . . .	$12.00
Loose, with rifle and pistol . . . . .	5.00

 Reissue: with "Blaster Pistol and Baton" [.00]. . . 100.00
 Loose, with black pistol and baton ..... 10.00

CAPTAIN TARPALS

Commander of the Gungan army in the battle against the Trade Federation droid army. Unfortunately, they are no match for the droids. As a career military man, think how it must have galled him to see a perpetual screw-up like Jar Jar Binks appointed a general! He probably leads a military coup within months of the end of Episode I, with the usual purges, show trials, concentration camps, and executions. If I were Boss Nass, I'd watch my back.

Episode I:

Captain Tarpals with "Electropole" (#84121) Col. 3 [561426.0000] ..... $12.00
 Loose, with electropole ..... 5.00

CHANCELLOR VALORUM

Chancellor of the Galactic Senate on Coruscant. Not much of a politician, since he fails to see that his one-time ally Senator Palpatine is out to get his job.

Episode I:

Chancellor Valorum with "Ceremonial Staff" (#84132) Col. 3 [559003.0000] small parts warning ..... $12.00

CHEWBACCA

Chewbacca is from the planet Kashyyyk and owes a life debt to Han Solo for releasing him from an Empire prison. As Han's partner, he seems to be the brains of the outfit. He was the one who made the initial deal to transport Obi-Wan and Luke away from Tatooine.

Chancellor Valorum (Hasbro 1999) and Chewbacca (Kenner 1978)

Chewbacca Bounty Hunter Disguise

The Shadows of the Empire storyline takes place between The Empire Strikes Back and before Return of the Jedi. Chewbacca and Leia go to Coruscant to try to find out who has been attempting to assassinate Luke. Chewbacca disguises himself as Snoova, a Wookiee bounty hunter. Leia is captured by Prince Xizor and Chewbacca contacts Luke and Lando. The three of them and Dash Rendar proceed to rescue the princess.

Hoth Chewbacca (Kenner 1998) and Chewbacca, Dejarik Champion (Hasbro 2001)

New: Shadows of the Empire

Chewbacca as Boushh's Bounty

"Chewbacca, acting as a prisoner, and Princess Leia, disguised as the bounty hunter Boushh, infiltrate Jabba's Palace. There they hope to rescue the carbonite-encased Han Solo."

New Power of the Force:

Chewbacca as Boushh's Bounty, with "Bowcaster" on Freeze Frame header card (Collection 1, #69882) [553656.00] . . . . . $15.00
Loose, chain around neck, with bowcaster . . . . . 5.00

Chewbacca (Dejarik Champion)

Don't forget the cardinal rule of Dejarik: recite after me, "Let the Wookiee Win!" That's probably why the Jedi Force File says he's "Dejarik Champion" while the UPC sticker and Hasbro's Web site say "Dejarik Challenge."

Power of the Jedi:

Chewbacca, Dejarik Champion (#84363) Col. 2 on Jedi Force File header card [571100.0000] . . . . . $15.00
Reissue [.0001] . . . . . 8.00

CLONE EMPEROR PALPATINE

"Six years after the destruction of the second Death Star, the galaxy is thrust into turmoil. A reborn evil threatens to enslave the galaxy, and the Republic's closest friend – Luke Skywalker – may become their greatest enemy. With the power to transfer his consciousness to genetic clones, a younger, stronger Emperor Palpatine is perilously close to gaining total control of the galaxy forever." From the Dark Empire comic book series.

Loose, . . . . . 10.00

CLOUD CAR PILOT

This figure has not been heavily collected, and like several similar figures from the classic series, it will only be issued with a vehicle in the new series.

Classic:

Cloud Car Pilot (Twin Pod) (#69630, 1982)
Original The Empire Strikes Back header card . . $125.00
Reissue on Return of the Jedi header card . . . . . 45.00

C-3PO (SEE-THREEPIO)

C-3PO is a Cybot Galactica 3PO Human Cyborg Relations Droid and needs no introduction, but he could use a few more buyers. He generally ranks about last in his class in price. In the movies he usually takes a beating and loses various body parts.

Classic:

See-Threepio (C-3PO) (#38220, 1978)

C-3PO (Removable Limbs)

The removable limbs version of C-3PO is based on his

C-3PO (Kenner 1983 and Hasbro 1999)

dismemberment and subsequent rescue in the second movie. The Flashback version was described as "Shopworn" on Hasbro's Web site. C-3PO has not been a popular character with collectors.

Classic:

C-3PO (Removable Limbs) (#69600, 1982)
Original The Empire Strikes Back header card . . . $90.00

 Loose, . . . . . 10.00

DARTH MAUL

Sith apprentice to Darth Sidious with a neat red and black face which makes a great Halloween mask. “Always two there are – a master and an apprentice.” Kills Qui-Gon and is cut in half by Obi-Wan. You can buy the cut-in-half version and reenact the scene. No blood, but there wasn’t any in the movie either. Lightsabers must cauterize as they slice.

Episode I:

DARTH VADER

The front photo was changed during the Return of the Jedi series. The original photo shows Darth holding his lightsaber. The new photo is more of a close-up and no lightsaber is visible.

The telescoping lightsaber is a really scarce variation which came with just a few of the earliest versions of Obi-Wan Kenobi, Luke Skywalker and Darth Vader. It adds about $2,000 to its value, but beware of fakes.

In the new series, his lightsaber was shortened, along with Luke’s and Obi-Wan’s, resulting in two different versions of his figure and the packaging variation of a short lightsaber in a long lightsaber clear plastic tray.

Classic:

Darth Vader (Removable Helmet)

New Power of the Force:

- Darth Vader with "Removable Helmet and Lightsaber" and with "Detachable Hand" on Freeze Frame header card (Collection 3, #69836,

Dash Rendar and Death Squad Commander

DASH RENDAR

The Shadows of the Empire storyline takes place between The Empire Strikes Back and before Return of the Jedi. Dash Rendar, an exceptional pilot, is a former Imperial Officer cadet and former smuggler, who fought for the Rebel Alliance in the Battle of Hoth. Leia hired him to help protect Luke from bounty hunters employed by Prince Xizor. When Leia is captured by Prince Xizor, he teams up with Luke, Lando and Chewbacca to rescue the princess. He shoots down many of Xizor's Black Sun starships with his Outrider starfighter.

New: Shadows of the Empire

- Dash Rendar, with "Heavy Weapons Pack" on a purple Shadows of the Empire card (#69561, June 1996) [531616.00] . . . . . $20.00
 Loose, with grey double-barreled pistol and rifle and shoulder mount backpack . . . . . 3.00

DEATH SQUAD COMMANDER

The Death Squad Commander's name was changed to Star Destroyer Commander when he was reissued on The Empire Strikes Back header cards.

Classic:

- Death Squad Commander (#38290, 1978)
 Original Star Wars "12 back" header card . . . . . $350.00
 Reissue on Star Wars "20/21 back" header card . . . . . 150.00

DEATH STAR GUNNER

The Death Star Gunner is a heavy weapons gunner who operates the Death Star superlaser. Operating big guns must make one grow taller because between Collection 1 and Collection 3 their average height, as listed on the header card, increased from 1.8 meters to 1.83 meters.

New Power of the Force:

DESTROYER DROID

One of the really cool aspects of Episode I was the Destroyer Droids rolling into battle and then unfolding to shoot. They have a forcefield which protects them from attack, but the field works both ways, so they must stick the nose of their weapons through the field to fire.

DROIDS FIGURES

Figures from the Droids cartoon series are listed only in the Action Figures—Chronological Section.

8D8

8D8 was designed to work in smelting factories. In the movies he works under EV-9D9 in Jabba's droid operations center. This droid was also available in the Jabba the Hutt Dungeon playset from Sears.

Classic:

EMPEROR PALPATINE

Emperor Palpatine is the human dictator of the Galactic Empire. He stands 1.73 meters tall, but mostly he is stooped over. The figure comes with a walking stick in both the original and new versions. He was initially available loose as a mail-in.

In the new series, the figure initially came on a Collection 1 header card. This was quickly corrected to Collection 3, making the original ".00" version somewhat scarce. It commands only a slight premium over the more common corrected version.

EV-9D9

The EV-9D9 is a Merendata EV Supervisor Droid owned by Jabba the Hutt. It runs Jabba's Droid Operations center. It is 1.6 meters tall. The figure comes with a data entry terminal on a stand. The figure is 4¾" tall, taller than the average human figure which is not to scale with the 1.6 meter given height.

The classic series figure was also available in the Jabba the Hutt Dungeon playset from Sears.

EWOKS FIGURES

Figures from the Ewoks cartoon series are listed only in the Action Figures—Chronological Section.

EWOKS: WICKET & LOGRAY

These two characters were previously issued separately in the Return of the Jedi figure line and are listed later.

Classic: See Logray, and see Wicket W. Warrick

Ewoks: Wicket & Logray (Kenner 1998) and 4-Lom (Palitoy 1983, British Manufacturer)

Loose Logray, with mask, medicine pouch and staff . . . . .	5.00

4-LOM (Classic)

Kenner reversed the names of 4-LOM and Zuckuss in the original figure line-up and corrected it in the new figures. The original figure was available as a mail-in.

Classic:

4-LOM (#70010, 1982)
Original The Empire Strikes Back header card . . .	$300.00

4-LOM (formerly Zuckuss)

The real 4-LOM is a an industrial protocol droid working as a freelance bounty hunter. He makes his first appearance in The Empire Strikes Back and somewhat resembles another protocol droid—C-3PO. His programming was altered and he became a thief and eventually a bounty hunter, working with Zuckuss for Jabba the Hutt.

Classic: See Zuckuss

New Power of the Force:

FX-7

"The multi-armed medical droid FX-7 was stationed at Echo Base on Hoth, serving as an assistant to the medial droid 2-1B." The two droids treated Luke Skywalker after the Wampa attack and a cold and smelly night in the belly of a Tauntaun. You probably think the Bacta Tank contained some kind of healing liquid, but my guess is cleaning fluid. FX-7 has not been a popular figure with collectors.

GAMORREAN GUARD

The Gamorrean guards work as palace guards for Jabba the Hutt. They are 1.8 meters tall and only slightly less in girth. If they have keen minds and pleasant dispositions, they keep them well hidden beneath their horns, snout, and tusks.

Classic:

GARINDAN

Garindan is a Kubaz spy who sells his services to the highest bidder, like all good spys. He is seen in the Mos Eisley spaceport in the original movie, but he had to wait until the new figures to appear in plastic.

New Power of the Force:

Garindan (Long Snout) with "Hold-Out Pistol" on green holo header card (Collection 3, #69706, July 1997) [542907.00] with 2nd hook, in stand-up bubble . . . . . $6.00

GRAND ADMIRAL THRAWN

"Five years after the Battle of Endor, the Rebel Alliance has driven the evil Empire into a distant corner of the galaxy.

*General Madine and Grand Admiral Thrawn
(Kenner 1983 and 1998)*

But a new danger has arisen: the last of the Emperor's warlords has devised a battle plan that could destroy the Republic. A tactical and military genius, Grand Admiral Thrawn rallied the remnants of the Imperial fleet and set in motion a plan to destroy the New Republic. Using Force-inhibiting ysalamiri, he came vitally close to achieving his evil plans." From the Heir to the Empire novels.

GRAND MOFF TARKIN

Grand Moff Tarkin is the human commander of the Death Star. He is 1.8 meters tall.

The figure is supposed to come with a blaster rifle and pistol, but actually it just has a large and a small pistol. His figure appeared briefly on a Collection 2 header card before being changed to Collection 3. The original version is quite scarce, accounting for its value.

New Power of the Force:

Grand Moff Tarkin with "Imperial Issue Blaster Rifle and Pistol" and sticker on plastic bubble which says "Never Before Offered in any Kenner Collection" on green holo header card (Collection 2, #69702, 1997) [540897.00] with 2nd hook, in stand-up bubble ..... $40.00

GREEDO

Greedo is a freelance Rodian bounty hunter. He stands 1.65 meters tall in his green skin, not counting his antenna. He died early in the Cantina scene in the first movie. He should have checked under the table for Han Solo's gun.

Grand Moff Tarkin and Greedo (Kenner 1997 and 1998)

Despite this brief movie appearance, he has been a popular figure and appeared fairly early in both the new and the original figure lines. The CommTech chip version was described as being an "All New Sculpt" on Hasbro's Web site.

HAN SOLO

In the original series, Luke Skywalker had two hair colors, but Han Solo changed his whole head. He may have gotten the large head in the movies when Leia kissed him, but on the figures it actually is larger. The small head is more common on the earlier cards, but was phased out. The large head is more common on later cards and loose figures. The front picture of Han was changed during the Return of the Jedi series. His original picture shows him with his pistol held in his right hand, pointing up. The new picture shows him with his gun pointing directly at you, held in both hands.

This version is the Han Solo we meet in the Mos Eisley Cantina, smuggler, rogue, and the heart-throb of millions of princesses, who, for better (here) or worse (usually), like their men to be a little dangerous.

Han Solo (Carbonite)

Han Solo was flash frozen in a carbonite chamber and turned over to Boba Fett who delivered him to Jabba the Hutt where he became Jabba's favorite wall decoration. All this was just a test run. Darth Vader's plan was to freeze Luke and turn him over to the Emperor. Kenner keeps changing its mind, from Carbonite Chamber, to Carbonite Freezing Chamber to Carbonite Block, but you get the block and the figure for the price of the figure.

Han Solo (Death Star)

“Han Solo’s reputation as a notorious smuggler and pirate also makes him a target for bounty hunters. After his ship is impounded by the Empire, Han helps Obi-Wan and Luke rescue Princess Leia from the Death Star. A courageous and daring pilot, Solo eventually realizes his personal stake in the Rebels’ fight for freedom.” Yeah, money, amnesty for his crimes, and the most powerful woman in the galaxy as his lady friend—that’s a world-class “personal stake.” And now he has to deal with real scum and villany—politicians.

Power of the Jedi:

Han Solo (Endor Gear/Trench Coat)

In early 1998, Han changed from Navy blue pants to tan or brown pants. These figures have only appeared on plain picture header cards, although these two changes should be independent of each other and brown pants on a holo card is possible. Since there are no text or graphics changes on the printed card, the new version is still numbered version “.00.” All of the figures are now being issued on “Freeze Frame” cards, so this particular version should remain quite scarce.

The initial Freeze Frame version misspelled “Saelt-Marae” and this makes it worth somewhat more than the corrected version. Both versions come with brown pants, so the loose brown pants figure is not scarce.

Han Solo (Hoth Outfit)

The new Han Solo in Hoth Gear originally came with an open hand, which was too open to hold his blaster pistol. The hand was changed for later versions of the figure. It’s called a “closed hand,” or a “gripping hand” but there is still an opening between the thumb and fingers.

JAWAS

The Jawas are hardware traders and scavengers on Tatooine. They average just 1 meter in height, but drive a big sandcrawler. The original Jawa came with a vinyl cape, but this was quickly changed to cloth. The few vinyl-caped Jawas are the most valuable of all the Star Wars figures. Care in buying is essential, because a fake vinyl cape is not hard to make and a loose Jawa in cloth cape is cheap. Even carded figures can be altered with skillful re-gluing of the bubble.

KLAATU

Klaatu can be found with either tan limbs or gray limbs in the classic figures, and sometimes with some of each. The price is the same in all cases, but a difference might start to show up if the figures become more valuable.

If you don't know where this character's name comes from then you don't know your classic science fiction movies very well. "Klaatu Barada Nikto" was the phrase which Patricia Neal said to the robot in The Day the Earth Stood Still to stop it from destroying the world after Michael Rennie (Klaatu) was shot. You can find it on a lot of T-shirts at science fiction conventions.

LANDO CALRISSIAN

Lando is the former captain of the Millennium Falcon. He lost the ship in a high-stakes game of sabacc to you know who, but eventually became Baron Administrator of the Cloud City mining and gambling establishment. He gets it back, and is promoted to the rank of General.

There are two versions of the classic character. In one, there is some white showing in his mouth and the figure is described as having “teeth.” The other version has the mouth closed and no white teeth or smile is visible.

Classic:

Lando Calrissian (General)

Lando is promoted to General and leads the attack on the second Death Star, with Nien Numb as his co-pilot. His leadership abilities make him a good choice. However, since it’s a suicide mission if our heroes don’t knock out the protective force field, maybe he was the only one the Rebel Alliance could get.

On the back of header card version “.00” for the new issue of this figure “Saelt-Marae” is misspelled as “Saelt-Marie”—two errors in just 10 letters. Version “.01” corrects this error. The error version is scarce.

LUKE SKYWALKER

Luke Skywalker was included in the Early Bird Package and many of these figures, plus a few of the original carded figures have a telescoping lightsaber. A genuine telescoping lightsaber adds about $1,000 to the figure's value, but many fakes are believed to exist. Both blond-haired and brown-haired Lukes were made throughout the original series. Blondes may or may not have more fun, but blond Lukes came in both tan pants and lighter colored pants. Brown Lukes only had tan pants. The header card picture was changed during the Return of the Jedi series from the original contemplative Tatooine picture to an action gunner picture. Both cards are common and there is little or no difference in price, although the new photo should be slightly preferable to collectors who have earlier versions of the original photo.

Luke Skywalker (Kenner 1978 and 1995)

In the new series, his lightsaber was shortened, along with Darth's and Obi-Wan's, resulting in two different versions of his figure and the packaging variation of a short lightsaber in a long lightsaber clear plastic tray.

Luke Skywalker (Bespin)

Luke senses that his friends are in trouble and leaves Yoda and Dagobah for Cloud City. It's a trap of course and Luke loses his innocence—not to mention his hand—but he gets a new outfit.

The front photo was changed during The Empire Strikes Back series. The original photo shows Luke standing in front of a white background, preparing to draw his gun. The new photo shows him facing forward with gun drawn in front of a blue background.

On the back of header card version ".00" for the Freeze Frame issue of this figure "Saelt-Marae" is misspelled as "Sealt-Marie." Version ".01" corrects this error. The error version is scarce, and expensive.

Luke Skywalker (Ceremonial Outfit)

Luke wears this outfit when he receives a medal (along with Han and Chewbacca) after destroying the first Death

Star. The ceremony takes place in the throne room of the Massassi temple and is attended by just about everybody. Most of them attended several times because they were all duplicated in the movie-making process to make the throng seem bigger. Luke must be proud, because (if you believe the figures) he grows from his original 1.72 meters to 1.75 meters. He stays that height while on Hoth, but shrinks back to 1.72 meters after he becomes a Jedi and feels the weight of the universe on his shoulders.

The figure originally appeared on a Collection 2 green card, but this error was soon corrected and the Collection 1 version is the more common. There is only a slight premium for the error card.

New Power of the Force:

Bespin Luke Skywalker and Luke Skywalker, Ceremonial Outfit (Kenner 1998)

Luke Skywalker (Expanded Universe)

"Six years after the destruction of the second Death Star, the galaxy is thrust into turmoil. A reborn evil threatens to enslave the galaxy, and the Republic's closest friend – Luke Skywalker – may become their greatest enemy... Freed from their detention cell, a group of Rebels begin their escape from the Imperial planet Byss. But the sudden appearance of Luke Skywalker, Jedi Master, could mean unfortunate news for the Rebels. Has Luke fallen under the spell of the dark side?" From the Dark Empire comic book series

Luke Skywalker, Imperial Guard and Luke Skywalker, Jedi Knight
(Kenner 1997 and 1983)

between The Empire Strikes Back and before Return of the Jedi. Luke and Lando go to the Imperial Center of Coruscant where Leia is held prisoner by Prince Xizor. They steal Imperial Guard uniforms and team up with Dash Rendar and Chewbacca to rescue the princess.

New: Shadows of the Empire

Luke Skywalker in Imperial Guard Disguise, with "Taser Staff Weapon" on a purple Shadows of the Empire card (#69566, June 1996) [531622.00] . . . . . $20.00
Loose, with dark red helmet and gray staff . . . . . 5.00

Luke Skywalker (Jedi Knight)

By the time Return of the Jedi comes out, Luke is a Jedi Knight and sports a neat black outfit.

Both the original and the new figures had variations. In the original series, the figure came most frequently with a green lightsaber, but some figures had a blue lightsaber instead. In the new series, the first figures to appear had a brown tunic or vest, but most of the figures have a black tunic that is the same color as the rest of the figure. In both series, the variation is an important factor in value. A Jedi Knight Luke Skywalker, in common black vest, was also used as a give-away at the Star Wars Special Edition premiere in early 1997. This figure came on a special header card and is listed in the previous section of this book under Mail-In and Exclusive figures.

Luke Skywalker (Tatooine)

This version of Luke is the first one we meet in the movies. The Flashback version was called "Luke Skywalker Tatooine with Floppy Hat" on Hasbro's Web site, but not on the figure. The CommTech version also seems to be from Tatooine, so I have grouped them here.

Luke Skywalker with "Blaster Rifle and Electro-binoculars" on Flashback Photo header card (#84036) [557524.00] . . . . .	$10.00

Loose, with model . . . . .	3.00

Luke Skywalker (X-Wing Pilot)

One of Luke's best outfits is his X-Wing Pilot gear, which he first wears in the attack on the Death Star at the battle of Yavin. It's also the one chosen for the 100th collector series doll.

Between header cards ".00" and ".01" in the new series the word "Fighter" was changed to "fighter" in three places.

MARA JADE

"Five years after the Battle of Endor, the Rebel Alliance has driven the evil Empire into a distant corner of the galaxy. But a new danger has arisen: The last of the Emperor's warlords has devised a battle plan that could destroy the Republic. Before the death of Palpatine, Mara Jade was the Emperor's right-hand assassin. Five years later and now a successful smuggler, the last thing Mara expected was to stumble upon her former arch-enemy—Luke Skywalker." From the Heir to the Empire novels. It gets even weirder when she marries Luke in the comic books.

OBI-WAN KENOBI (YOUNG JEDI)

Obi-Wan was an apprentice Jedi at the beginning of Episode I. After killing Darth Maul, he takes Anakin as his apprentice, in what (as we all know) will turn out to be fateful decision. There are six different action figures of the young Obi-Wan in just the three years since Episode I came out, and there are sure to be many more from Attack of the Clones, especially since he can't be killed, either in that movie, or the next! Enough already with the robes—I hope he gets a few new outfits.

Episode I:

ORRIMAARKO (PRUNE FACE)

Orrimaarko reappear in 1998. As with Momaw Nadon (Hammerhead) and Saelt Marae (Yak Face) he now bears his real name instead of Prune Face.

Classic:

Prune Face (#71320, 1984)

PADMÉ NABERRIE

Supposedly handmaiden to Queen Amidala, but really her alter ego when she wants to let her hair down (figuratively and literally). Who can blame her, with some of her costumes of state. In Attack of the Clones her name is more accurately given as "Padmé Amidala."

Ody Mandrell and OOM-9 (binoculars upper left) (Hasbro 1999)

Reissue [.0400] . . . . .	8.00
Loose, with yellow-bladed lightsaber . . . . .	3.00

PONDA BABA (WALRUS MAN)

Ponda Baba is an Aqualish smuggler and pirate. He is the partner of Dr. Evazan. He strongly resembles the Walrus Man from the original figures, but is dressed differently.

Padmé Naberrie and Pit Droids (Hasbro 1999)

Perhaps this is to hide his replacement arm. Ben Kenobi sliced off the original in the Mos Eisley Cantina.

In the new series, Ponda Baba initially came on a Collection 2 header card. This was quickly corrected to Collection 3, making the original ".00" version scarce.

Classic:

Walrus Man (#39050, 1978–79)
Original Star Wars header card . . . . .	$275.00
Reissue on The Empire Strikes Back header card . . . . .	125.00

POWER DROID

The Power Droid figure is box shaped and gets around on two mechanical feet. It closely resembles the robots Hewie, Dewie, and Louie from the movie Silent Running starring Bruce Dern. The only new version of this figure is included with a Jawa in the CommTech series and called a "Gonk" droid. It has not been issued separately.

PRINCE XIZOR

The Shadows of the Empire storyline takes place between The Empire Strikes Back and before Return of the Jedi. Prince Xizor runs the Black Sun criminal organization and wants to ruin Darth Vader and take over his position as the second most powerful figure in the empire. He tries to eliminate Luke Skywalker before Lord Vader can fulfill his promise to deliver Luke alive to the Emperor. He captures Leia, but Luke, Lando, Chewbacca, and Dash Rendar rescue her and get away.

PRINCESS LEIA ORGANA

Luke changes his hair color and pants and Han Solo gets a big head, but Princess Leia's basic figure stays the same throughout the original series. Of course she does get other outfits, but they are different figures. This one wears white. The CommTech version of the figure has the hood up on her head and was called "Princess Leia Hood Up" on Hasbro's Web site, but not on the figure.

Princess Leia (Bespin Gown)

There are two versions of this figure. In one the neck is flesh colored (crew neck) and in the other the neck is the same color as the rest of the costume or outfit (turtle neck). Both versions come with the same distinctive cloak. The front photo on the header card was changed during The Empire Strikes Back figure series. The original photo shows Leia turned to the left, looking back at the camera. The new photo shows her directly facing the camera.

Princess Leia (Boushh Disguise)

The Shadows of the Empire storyline takes place between The Empire Strikes Back and before Return of the Jedi. Leia and Chewbacca go to Coruscant to try to find out who has been attempting to assassinate Luke. Leia disguised herself as the Ubesian bounty hunter, Boushh. Leia is captured by Prince Xizor and rescued by Chewbacca, Luke, Lando, and Dash Rendar. Leia keeps the disguise and uses it again attempting to rescue Han Solo from Jabba the Hutt.

Princess Leia (Ewok Celebration Outfit)

This is a new outfit for the Princess, and a new waist-length hair style, too. The Princess Leia collection figures, with four other outfits and hair styles, came out at about the same time. On the back of header card version ".00" for the new issue of this figure "Saelt-Marae" is misspelled as "Sealt-Marie"—two errors in just 10 letters. Version ".01" corrects this error. The error version is scarce.

(Kenner 1998 and Hasbro 2001) the galaxy is thrust into turmoil. A reborn evil threatens to enslave the galaxy, and the Republic’s closest friend – Luke Skywalker – may become their greatest enemy... Hoping to free her brother Luke from the evil of the dark side, Jedi Leia prepares to match her power against that of the reborn Emperor. Boarding his colossal warship, Leia is overwhelmed by the oppression of the dark side.” From the Dark Empire comic book series.

Princess Leia (Hoth Outfit)

Princess Leia has appeared in a lot of new outfits in the new series, but this classic figure has not appeared. It’s probably just as well. There were so many figures in Hoth outfits in the classic series that it was hard to tell them apart.

Princess Leia (Jabba’s Prisoner)

Princess Leia appeared in a very skimpy and unprincess-like outfit after she was captured by Jabba the Hutt at the beginning of Return of the Jedi. She uses her slave chain to strangle the ugly slug before she escapes.

This figure never appeared with the Classic offerings and so Princess Leia as Jabba’s Prisoner, or Princess Leia “Slave Girl” as she is sometimes called, was heavily collected when she first appeared. This pushed her price up to $15.00, but the price fell as more and more supply appeared and now she is no more valuable than other figures. Near the end of 1997 she was available without holo sticker, and this more attractive version is still available in some stores.

On the back of header card version “.01” for the new Freeze Frame issue of this figure “Saelt-Marae” is misspelled as “Sealt-Marie”—two errors in just 10 letters. Version “.02” corrects this error.

The most recent version of this popular figure is as a deluxe figure packaged with Jabba’s Sail Barge Cannon.

REBEL COMMANDO

The Rebel Commando is based on the Rebel troops who fought in the Battle of Endor. There is no equivalent figure in the New Power of the Force line-up, but the Endor Rebel Soldier is similar.

Classic:

Rebel Commando (#70740, 1983)

REBEL (FLEET) TROOPER

Initially the Rebel Fleet Trooper came on a Collection 2 header card. This was quickly corrected to Collection 1, making the original “.00” version scarce.

This figure was reissued as “Rebel Trooper, Tantive IV Defender” in the Power of the Jedi series. “The heroic Rebel troopers were the last line of defense as the ship (Rebel Blockade Runner Tantive IV) was boarded by Darth Vader and a platoon of Stormtroopers.”

New Power of the Force:

REBEL SOLDIER (ENDOR)

The Endor Rebel Soldier was not included in the classic figure line-up, but the Rebel Commando is similar, and fought in the same battle.

On the back of header card version “.00” for the Freeze Frame issue of this figure “Saelt-Marae” is misspelled as “Sealt-Marie.” Version “.01” corrects this error. The original error version is scarce and this is the initial appearance of the figure, which accounts for the price.

Hoth Rebel Soldier and Ree-Yees (Kenner 1997 and 1983)

New Power of the Force:

REBEL SOLDIER (HOTH GEAR)

These are rebel soldiers in their ice planet Hoth uniforms. The figure was also available loose with the Snowspeeder vehicle.

In the new series, the Hoth Rebel Soldier initially came on a Collection 2 header card. This was soon corrected to Collection 1, but there is little difference in price between the two versions.

On the back of header card version “.02” for the new Freeze Frame issue of this figure “Saelt-Marae” is misspelled as “Saelt-Marie”—two errors in just 10 letters. Version “.03” corrects this error.

REE-YEES

Ree-Yees is a Gran for Kinyen and is last seen on Jabba’s sail barge when it is blown to bits. He reappeared in

Ric Olie and Romba (Hasbro 1999 and Kenner 1985)

1998 but it must have been hard for Kenner to put him back together because he is incredibly scarce.

R2-B1

Blue astromech droid which attempts repairs to the Naboo Royal Starship under fire. Several are lost in the attempt, which may explain why the figure is so scarce.

Episode I:

R2-B1 Astromech Droid with "Power Harness" (#84128) Col. 3. [566157.0000] . . . . .	$25.00

Loose, with power harness . . . . . 10.00

R2-D2

R2 units are tripodal computer repair and information retrieval robots, or astromech droids. They act as navigators and in-flight repair droids on Rebel X-Wing fighters. R2-D2 is 0.96 meters tall, a little taller than Yoda. In The Phantom Menace we learned that it originally belonged to Queen Amidala. We first meet R2 as it repairs her Royal Starship to aid in the escape from Naboo.

Like C-3PO, R2-D2 has not been particularly popular with collectors, even though many versions have been issued. The only really cool one is the Electronic Power/FX figure which makes authentic movie sounds. Of course, it only does that if you remove it from the package. It's only listed in the chronological section.

R2-D2 (Holographic Princess Leia)

While young Luke repairs his new droid (actually his mother's old droid, but that's another story) a holographic princess appears and says "Help me Obi-Wan Kenobi, you're my only hope." Knowing that his sister likes to dress as a princess, and sick of helping her every time she gets in trouble, Luke tells the droid to "get out and stay out!" But Uncle Owen makes him go find the droid anyway. No, that's not quite right...Something like that anyway.

R2-D2 (Sensorscope)

Like C-3PO, R2-D2 is a popular character, but not always a popular action figure collectible. This figure has never drawn much interest from collectors.

R5-D4

The R5-D4 is a Modified Astromech Droid used in combat by the Rebel Alliance. It is 1 meter tall. The 1996 figure comes with a yellow projectile and has a concealed launcher which is revealed when the droid is opened at the top. The word "Photon" was dropped from the description of the missile launcher, undoubtedly because it sounded more like Star Trek than Star Wars.

SAELT-MARAE (YAK FACE)

Saelt-Marae, better known to classic series collectors as Yak Face is an informant working for Jabba the Hutt. He stands 2.2 meters tall, which helps him keep tabs on people.

Saelt-Marae and Saesee Tiin (Kenner 1997 and Hasbro 2001)

The original figure was primarily available overseas, which has kept its price quite high.

TIE FIGHTER PILOT

These elite imperial pilots are human and fly the Twin Ion Engine (TIE) Fighter for the Galactic Empire. They also carry a blaster pistol, but there doesn't seem to be much they could do with it while flying. They average 1.7 meters in height, about 0.1 meters shorter than Stormtroopers.

In the new series, the first TIE Fighter Pilot figures came with a small-parts warning on a sticker. This was quickly changed to a printed warning on the ".01" header card. The original version is scarce and valuable. The first green card issue was in Collection 2, but this was corrected to Collection 3. There is only a small premium for the Collection 2 version.

TUSKEN RAIDER (SAND PEOPLE)

The Tusken Raiders are humanoid nomadic warriors. They average 1.9 meters tall and just about kicked Luke Skywalker's butt in the early stages of the original movie.

The figure comes with a "gaderffi" stick weapon, which seems to have almost as many spellings as Momar Quadaffi. It's spelled "gaderffii" some places. The first version of the new figure came with a closed hand. This was replaced with a more open hand. A scarce few of the reissue figures still had the closed hand, making this a valuable variation.

WEEQUAY

Weequays are from the planet Sriluur and several work for Jabba the Hutt as guards.

The new version of Weequay identifies him as a skiff guard and adds a "blaster rifle" to his weaponry. It's more like the size of a large pistol and very similar weapons are frequently just called "Blasters" by Kenner. Initially Weequay came on a Collection 2 header card. This was quickly corrected to Collection 3, making the original ".00" version scarce.

YODA

Yoda, the diminutive Jedi master, is of an unknown race and lives on the swamp planet, Dagobah. He was one of the 12 members of the Jedi Council, in Episode I, when there still was a council, and, for that matter, a republic. He is over 900 years old, so he needs a gimer stick to help him walk. When you are strong in the force, you can speak softly (and with backward syntax) and carry a small stick.

Yoda, orange snake and brown snake (Kenner 1980 and 1983)

In the original series, Yoda comes with a snake which fits around his neck as well as a gimer stick. The front photo on the header card was changed during the Return of the Jedi figure series. The original photo shows Yoda holding his stick and facing somewhat to the left. The new photo shows him facing significantly to the right. Yoda originally had a brown snake, but some of The Empire Strikes Back figures came with an orange snake. The gimer stick is roughly the same color as the snake in each version.

ZUTTON (SNAGGLETOOTH)

"Zutton is a Snivvian artist who turned bounty hunter by chasing down Thalassian slavers. He was given the nickname "Snaggletooth" at the Mos Eisley cantina, because of his pronounced fangs. His exceptional bounty hunter skills have caught the attention of crimelord Jabba the Hutt, who has put his services on retainer."

The classic blue Snaggletooth was only available in the Cantina Adventure Set, which was a Sears exclusive. He is full sized and he wears boots and a blue suit. The figure came polybagged with a Han Solo-style blaster in this set. The only Snaggletooth on a header card is in a red suit and he is the correct smaller size and bare-footed. There is no difficulty in distinguishing between them.

BOOKS

BOOKS

Star Wars mass market Collectible #1, the very first mass market Star Wars item produced, was the movie novelization paperback book which appeared in late November 1976, seven months before the movie opened. It can be identified by the line “First Edition: December 1976” at the bottom, on the copyright page. As the movie became a hit, the paperback was reprinted many times, with huge print runs—3.5 million copies in the first year. None of these reprintings is scarce, and none is valuable.

The novel appeared in hardcover in the fall of 1977. The trade hardcover is scarce and valuable. It has a gold dust jacket, and says “Hardbound Ballantine Books Edition: October 1977/First Edition: December 1976” in two lines on the copyright page. While the first paperback edition and the hardcover edition enjoy crossover collector interest from persons who are not primarily Star Wars fans, book club editions have no collector following whatever apart from die-hard Star Wars fans. Consequently the book club edition of the original Star Wars novel, and for that matter, any Star Wars novel, is not valuable. The one exception might be the very first printing of the book club edition of Star Wars. This can be identified by the printing code “S27” in the gutter on page 183. It appeared before the trade hardcover, making it the first hardcover edition of the book. The book was ghost written by Alan Dean Foster, from the screenplay, a fact now confirmed by Lucas.

Each of the other movies was novelized in turn. Other original novels followed for a few years from Ballantine Del Rey. They were written by Alan Dean Foster, Brian Daley and L. Neil Smith. Then there was a slack period until Bantam got the Star Wars novels license. Comics tapered off at this time as well. In mid 1991, Star Wars novels returned with Timothy Zahn’s Heir to the Empire. This book made it to the top of the New York Times bestseller lists. Bantam continued a successful publishing program with a number of new novels and juvenile adaptations. Lucas Films licensing has insisted on overall continuity in the storylines for both the books and the comics, so that they constitute a consistent “expanded universe.” This makes these novels important in the Star Wars universe, because there are only about six hours of actual films. The earlier Del Rey novels were mostly written before the movie series was completed, and thus lack this continuity. The lives of subsidiary characters such as Boba Fett and new characters such as Grand Admiral Thrawn are only covered in the novels and the comics. In 1998, Del Rey got the Star Wars license back. They have continued to publish Star Wars novels aggressively.

NOVELS (1990–98)

Timothy Zahn's Heir to the Empire launched the current phase of Star Wars publishing. It appeared about six months before the first Dark Horse Comic—Dark Empire and it reached #1 on the New York Times bestseller's list. The story takes place five years after the death of Darth Vader and recounts the efforts of your favorite heroes to bring as many planets as possible into the New Republic and the emergence of Grand Admiral Thrawn as leader of the remnants of the Empire in a counter-revolution.

The novels and story collections are listed below in their approximate order of appearance, based on the first book in the series. Titles first published in hardcover are listed first, followed by paperback series.

It has been common for the Science Fiction Book Club to reprint three-book paperback original series in one omnibus book club edition. For a collector, however, a first edition paperback is more valuable than a hardcover reprint, because it is the true first edition of the work.

In order to be worth collecting, any hardcover book must be in near mint condition, with dust jacket in similar shape. The only defect in a dust jacket that does not significantly reduce value is "price-clipping," where a small portion of the inside front flap of the dust jacket is cut to remove the original price. This was commonly done to books given as gifts and by some used book dealers who wanted to charge more than original price. It is a pointless practice today, because the price is also printed on the bar code box in back.

Now that publication of new Star Wars novels is in full swing, print runs are large and price appreciation is unlikely. The best way to collect is to wait until the hardcover book you want is available for about $5.00 on the remainder tables at your favorite book store; and then look through all of them to find a first edition. You can accumulate a handsome hardcover collection this way, at reasonable prices.

YOUNG ADULT AND JUVENILE NOVELS

Juvenile and Young Adult books do not draw much collector interest, while kiddie books with pictures are fairly collectible. This has little or nothing to do with the quality of the fiction.

NON-FICTION

Star Wars books come in every conceivable category of non-fiction. There are art books, sketch books, making-of-the-movie books, reference books, humor books, and even "fictional" non-fiction books. Many books include elements of several categories, making organization of the following lists problematic. You may have to search a little for the title you are interested in.

CERAMICS

CERAMICS

BANKS

The Roman Ceramics Company was the first to manufacture ceramic banks. These, like all 1977 collectibles, appeared before the action figures, but many collectors passed them up at the time and they were available at retail for several years. Each bank came in a white box and was hand painted. Sigma made three ceramic banks for the later movies. See also plastic and metal banks under DOLLS AND FIGURES and talking banks under ELECTRONICS.

Ceramic Banks (1977-82):

C-3PO Ceramic Bank, 8" tall, waist up, metallic gold (Roman Ceramics 1977) boxed ..... $75.00
 Darth Vader Ceramic Bank, 7" tall, head (Roman Ceramics 1977) boxed ..... 85.00

Yoda Ceramic Bank (Sigma 1982)

R2-D2 Ceramic Bank, 8" tall, full figure (Roman Ceramics 1977) boxed ..... 75.00 Chewbacca Ceramic Bank, 10½" tall, kneeling with gun (Sigma 1982) ..... 45.00
 Jabba the Hutt Ceramic Bank, 6" tall, figural (Sigma 1982) ..... 45.00
 Yoda Ceramic Bank, 8" tall, figural (Sigma 1982) ..... 45.00

COOKIE JARS

Ceramic cookie jars were another early collectible from Roman Ceramics. R2-D2 is just the right shape to hold a lot of cookies. Cookie jars will be making a comeback in a big way in 1998, with over a dozen scheduled from Star Jars. They also make similar items for Star Trek and other licenses. Only 1,000 of each will be produced and they look very attractive in the pictures that they sent me. They can be reached at (561) 622-7693.

PLATES

The first Star Wars collector plates were made in the late 1980s by the Hamilton Collection. There were eight plates, plus a larger 10th anniversary plate in 1987. The plates originally came in a styrofoam sandwich box.

8¼" Plates, First Series (1985–87)

Han Solo, pictured seated in Mos Eisley Cantina. . . . .	$50.00
Princess Leia, pictured holding blaster . . . . .	50.00
Luke Skywalker and Darth Vader, pictured fighting with lightsabers . . . . .	60.00

Second Series, Star Wars Trilogy, 8¼" art by Morgan Weistling (Hamilton Collection 1993)

Star Wars , featuring Luke Skywalker in X-Wing Pilot outfit in foreground. . . . .	40.00
The Empire Strikes Back , featuring Luke Skywalker with Yoda on his back at top, Han Solo and Leia kissing underneath. . . . .	40.00
Return of the Jedi , featuring Luke Skywalker and Leia in Jabba's prisoner outfit swinging on rope . . . . .	40.00

Third Series

These plates were originally offered at $40.00, but by 1997 Previews was still distributing them, now for $35.00. The advertisements say they are limited to 28 firing days, but that is not quite the same thing as limiting to a specific quantity. In any event, just about everyone who wants one of them has bought it already, so price appreciation will be slow.

CLOTHING AND ACCESSORIES

CLOTHING

You can outfit yourself from head to toe with Star Wars clothes, and they are listed here in that order. While many collectors own items of Star Wars apparel, few would consider themselves collectors of it. Rather, they own some items that they wear when the occasion arises or the mood hits them. While some accessories, such as belt buckles or watches, have developed a collector following, the general rule can be summed up as "Don't expect to make a killing on your Star Wars T-shirts."

CLOTHES

Most of the items listed here are designed for adults, and are priced accordingly. Most of the prices are the original retail price. All this really tells you is that you shouldn't pay $30.00 for a T-shirt if you can get a hundred different styles of T-shirts of the same type for under $20.00 retail at the local shopping mall.

T-Shirts

Almost all T-shirts are bought to be worn, not collected. The earliest T-shirts were produced using Iron-on transfers made by Factors, Inc. Enough were still around in 1994 for T-shirts to be available with the original 1977 transfers.

In 1994, American Marketing Enterprises produced a line of T-shirts using the images from the Topps Galaxy trading cards which had appeared in 1993. 1997 T-shirts used the images from the Star Wars Special Edition video tape boxes and images of the Kenner action figures. I have also seen images of cards from Decipher's various collectible card games. Maybe someone is interested in using the cover of this book for a T-shirt; who knows? (Contact publisher for rights.)

These days there is a brisk business in this icon of the American popular culture, with several new Star Wars T-shirt designs available just about every month. The following list includes primarily ones offered to comic shops through Diamond Previews, and so the items and prices are for teenage and adult sizes. No attempt has been made to list children's and department store items. As with most Star Wars items, very few were available in the dark times, from 1985 to 1994, but now the flood has begun and there will be no let-up as the new movies appear.

OTHER CLOTHING ITEMS

The Ralph Marlin Star Wars collection started with one tie in 1992 and has now grown to a whole wardrobe of silk and polyester ties, caps, silk boxer shorts and embroidered T-shirts. Despite the quality, most of these items are still clothing, and thus not very collectible. After all, no one will buy your used boxer shorts, even if they are silk. Ties, belts, belt buckles and the other items listed here at least have some collector potential.

ACCESSORIES

PINS—JEWELRY—WATCHES—WALLETS

Clothes make the man, but accessories make the clothes! Also, it makes a lot more sense to collect accessories than clothes. You can wear them occasionally without damage or reduction in value.

PINS

The market for attractive pins, ones that you might actually wear somewhere other than to a Star Wars fan club meeting, has been owned by Hollywood Pins. They also make a very attractive line of Star Trek pins. These pins are sold through comic shops and specialty dealers and are available over the Internet. The company has not continued their license for the original movies and, as of this writing, may or may not make pins for the new trilogy. Existing stocks will be available for a while, but when they are gone, prices may start to rise.

WATCHES

As with most collectibles, the best way to collect a watch is in its original packaging. Bradley Time made most of the Star Wars watches in the 1970s and 1980s. There are quite a number of styles. Digital watches generally sell for a little less than analog watches and 1980s watches based on the second and third movies sell for a little less than those based on the first movie from the 1970s.

Recently, plastic figural head watches have been made by Hope Industries and sold in toy stores. They have not developed a following among regular watch collectors, but they are reasonably attractive as Star Wars toy items.

OTHER ACCESSORIES

Buttons are popular, but they are easy to make and most are unlicensed. As such, they can be accumulated, but no accurate list can be compiled. Just about any such button can be bought for about $1.00 for regular size and about $2.00 for large size. Selling later at a profit is another matter. The most fun way to collect them is to look for free ones, which are often available at movie openings or shows. A few licensed items which have developed a collector following are listed below.

COINS AND PREMIUMS

A-Wing Pilot, Amanaman, Anakin Skywalker, AT-ST Driver, and B-Wing Pilot coins (Kenner 1985)

COINS AND PREMIUMS

A premium is a secondary collectible issued in a package with a toy, such as an action figure, to enhance its value. Weapons and other items that are on the same scale as the toy are called accessories. When removed from the package, an accessory is included with the toy when sold “loose,” while the premium becomes a separate collectible. By far the most valuable premiums are the Power of the Force coins which came with the action figures in the classic series of that name. Some of the newer action figure series also had coins and others came with Freeze Frame slides and with CommTech chips. Some of those action figure series were produced in large numbers, making most of the figures, and their premiums, quite cheap to collect.

Barada, Bib Fortuna, Biker Scout, Boba Fett, Chewbacca, and Chief Chirpa coins (Kenner 1985)

POWER OF THE FORCE COINS

There were two ways to get one of the classic Kenner Power of the Force coins—with a figure, or by mailing in a proof of purchase. The figures came with a coin which related to the figure, but when you mailed in a proof of purchase, you got a random coin. Consequently, the coins that came with a figure are a lot more common than the ones that did not. The action figure section in this book lists both the new and reissued figures which came on Power of the Force header cards, with coins. More of the new figures were issued, so their coins are the most common. The exceptions are the Anakin Skywalker and Yak Face coins, since their figures were only available overseas. There are a total of 37 Power of the Force figures, but only 35 coins. The AT-AT Driver and Nikto had Warok coins.

Creatures, C-3PO, Darth Vader, Droids, Emperor, and Emperor's Royal Guard coins (Kenner 1985)

EV-9D9, FX-7, Gamorrean Guard, Greedo, Imperial Commander, and Imperial Dignitary coins (Kenner 1985)

Han Solo: Rebel Fighter, Rebel Hero, Carbon Freeze, Hero, Imperial Gunner, and Jawa coins (Kenner 1985)

Kenner planned to issue Power of the Force figures for Chief Chirpa, Emperor's Royal Guard, Luke, Logray, and TIE Fighter Pilot, but did not. The coins for these figures were probably struck in anticipation of this, because they were commonly used to fulfill the mail-in requests. Interest in the Star Wars line was waning in 1985, and thus relatively few people mailed-in, so these coins are still scarce.

The more expensive coins were rarely used to fulfill the mail-in offer. They mostly got on the market from sources within Kenner. There was one other way, however, to get them all. Collectors who pestered Kenner about the missing coins were eventually given the right to buy a whole set, for $29.00! The offer was never made to the public. It turned out to be one of the better purchases of all time, as a complete set is worth more than 100 times that amount today.

All these coins are from the collection of Rob Johnson. Thanks again, Rob!

MILLENNIUM MINTED COIN COLLECTION

Kenner began to reissue Power of the Force coins in 1998. These coins are gold-colored, so they will not be mistaken for the originals, which were silver. The coins come with figures and are mounted in a stand-up display holder. Coin and figure come in a window box, which has a back window as well so you can see the reverse of the coin. The package sells for $10.00, so I have valued the coin at $5.00. Will avid exonomia collectors bid the price up? Who knows. Action figure collectors consider it a shameless gimmick to sell them another copy of a figure that they already own.

OTHER PREMIUMS

FREEZE FRAME SLIDES

The 56 Freeze Frame Slides include actual movie scenes. The most interesting one(s) came with R2-D2. The text on the slide frame was changed from "Shutting down the Imperial trash compactor" to "Shutting down the Death Star trash compactor." The original slide (and figure it came with) are quite scarce and no one will be eager to remove the slide from the figure in his or her collection. Other slides that came with scarce figures are also scarce.

COMMTECH CHIPS

CommTech Chips came with Episode I figures, CommTech figures, and with the three Cinema Scenes three-figure packs. Those that came with scarce figures are naturally even scarcer loose. They record lines of dialogue or sounds from the movies and play them back with the chip reader. You don't need to remove the chip from the package to play it with the reader. I don't know the number for a few of the figures because I don't want to take my valuable figures off their cards to find out.

JEDI FORCE FILE

Jedi Force File fold-outs from Power of the Jedi figures don't impress me much as an in-pack premium and I doubt that they will be collected. They might be worth $1.00, if you are lucky.

COMICS

COMICS

Star Wars collectible Number 2 is the comic book adaptation of the movie. It also appeared prior to the movie premiere – just prior. The first six issues of the comic follow the plot of the movie and the adventures continue on their own until issue #39 when the second movie adaptation begins. One interesting feature of the comic version of the movie is the appearance of Biggs Darklighter, Luke's friend. He was originally seen with Luke in the movie, but was edited out to keep the pace of the action as fast as possible. He does appear in the movie, as the last pilot killed by Darth Vader in the final battle against the Death Star, but he is not fully identified. The comic was adapted from a "rough cut" of the movie before the character was eliminated. He is somewhat restored in the 1997 updated version of the movie and now even has an action figure.

Biggs Darklighter from Star Wars #1 (Marvel Comics 1977)

There were two versions of the first issue of the comic book. The more common version has the price of 30¢ in a white box while the rare version has a price of 35¢ in a white diamond.

There were no comics from 1987, when the Marvel series ended, until December 1991 when Dark Horse comics started the current explosion with the publication of Star Wars Dark Empire.

It is hard to believe, but there are only eight hours of actual Star Wars film footage to date, less than half as many hours as Star Trek's movies alone, not counting the over 300 hours of Star Trek TV shows (and, yes, completely ignoring the made-for-children Ewoks and Droids TV shows). Avid fans have made up for this by seeing each of the movies numerous times. Still, comics, and books, supply much needed additional material to the Star Wars saga and therefore play a correspondingly greater role than in other series.

The Shadows of the Empire book and comic storyline has generated its own supply of action figures. Characters from the books and comics are included as major characters in the Star Wars universe in such books as Star Wars, The Essential Guide to Characters by Andy Mangels.

CLASSIC STAR WARS

Dark Horse Comics (Aug. 1992 – June 1994)

The events in this series take place between those in the first film Star Wars: A New Hope and the second film The Empire Strikes Back. The stories were written by Archie Goodwin and the art is primarily by Al Williamson, with occasional help from Allen Nunis. The covers are all new and are mostly by Williamson, with a couple by Nunis, George Evans, Mark Schultz, Tom Yeates, or Bret Blevins. The material was originally published from 1981 to 1984 in newspaper strips, and has been reformatted and newly colored for this series.

DARK HORSE COMICS

Dark Horse Comics (1993–94)

Dark Horse Comics had two series of Star Wars stories. In issues #7 through #9, Tom Veitch scripted a three-part Tales of the Jedi story, to introduce readers to the regular comic book series of the same name which debuted in October 1993.

In issues #17 through #19, Dan Thorsland did the same thing as an introduction to the Droids comics which first appeared in Jan. 1994.

STAR WARS

Marvel Comics (July, 1977)

Although dated July 1977, the first comics actually appeared before the movie opened. The first six issues adapted the movie based on a “rough cut.” This has led to considerable wonder about the “missing scenes” where, at the beginning of the movie, Luke goes to see his Tatooine pal, Biggs Darklighter, who tells him that he is going to join the Rebel forces. This scene was cut from the final version of the movie. A later reunion scene between Luke and Biggs, just before they fly off in their X-wing fighters to attack the Death Star, was also cut. It was restored in the 1997 Special Edition. Biggs is killed by Darth Vader, but Luke’s other wing-mate, Wedge Antilles, survives. In 1998, Biggs was finally immortalized in plastic as an action figure.

The most valuable comic in the Marvel series is the 35 cent version of issue Number 1. Only a very few were printed, as a price increase test. The test must have been successful, because the price has increased over 1,000 fold since then. The second and third movies were adapted in turn and the series finished out its nine-year run with issue number 107. There was no coordination between the few Star Wars novels being published and the comic book series, and the comics issued between the movies did not have the benefit of knowledge of the movie plots. That innovation did not come until the 1990s, with the many Dark Horse comics series. Marvel used its better artists on these comics, at least for the first six years or so, and both comic collectors and Star Wars collectors have considered these stories to be worthy additions to their collections.

Star Wars #10, #25, #50 (Marvel)

STAR WARS: DARK EMPIRE

Dark Horse Comics (Dec. 1991–Oct. 1992)

This was the first Star Wars series done by Dark Horse Comics. The story takes place six years after the Battle of Endor and the death of Darth Vader. The fighting continues and Luke and Lando are shot down over the former Imperial capitol. Naturally Han, Leia, and Chewie try to rescue them. While massive dark side World Devistators ravage entire planets, Leia has to protect her unborn child and Luke is seduced by the dark side. The Emperor wields a mysterious

STAR WARS: DARK EMPIRE II

Dark Horse Comics (Dec. 1994 – May 1995)

In the second Dark Empire series, Luke tries to rebuild the Jedi Knights while the remains of the Empire still hopes to destroy the New Republic with a new super-weapon. In the meantime, Han keeps one step ahead of Boba Fett while he tracks down an old Jedi woman. Luke looks for the Jedi Holocron on the planet Ossus. Lando hides in a shipment of War Droids for an attack on the Empire. Han rejoins Leia as they protect their young twins from the Emperor on New Alderaan.

STAR WARS: DROIDS Dark Horse Comics (April – Sept. 1994)

These whimsical misadventures of Artoo-Detoo and See-Threepio take place years before the events in the Star Wars: A New Hope movie. They journey to the Kalarba system where they are acquired by the Pitareeze family. They encounter IG-88 and the notorious Olag Greck plus a variety of pirates, bounty-hunters, and rock monsters.

The adventures actually begin in Dark Horse Comics #17 through #19, and this story is included in the series trade paperback. Most of the stories were written by Dan Thorsland, with one by Ryder Windham. Art was supplied by Bill Hughes, Andy Mushynsky, and Ian Gibson. Covers are by Kilian Plunkett.

The regular series continues these stories, with tales written by Ryder Windham and Jan Strnad. Art is by Ian Gibson, Bill Hughes, Keith Williams, and Rich Perrotta. Covers are again by Kilian Plunkett.

STAR WARS: SHADOWS OF THE EMPIRE

Dark Horse Comics (May – Oct. 1996)

This comic, based on the novel by Steve Perry, takes place between the events in The Empire Strikes Back and Return of the Jedi. It pits the underworld against the Rebel Alliance against the Empire. Prince Xizor controls the largest merchant fleet in the Empire, and also its largest criminal organization. Darth Vader resents the Prince's power, the Prince wants Darth's power, while Dash Rendar just resents the Prince. Our heroes want to rescue Han, but every bounty hunter in the galaxy wants him for Jabba's reward, alive or dead. The Emperor wants Luke, alive, while the Prince wants Luke (and Darth, for that matter) dead. Xizor captures Leia on general principals, leaving almost as many heroes needing rescue as there are in disguise, doing the rescuing.

This story is the only one, so far, which has generated its own group of action figures: Prince Xizor, Dash Rendar, Chewbacca disguised as a bounty hunter, Luke disguised as an Imperial Guard and Leia in Boushh disguise.

The comics were written by John Wagner, with art by Kilian Plunkett and P. Craig Russell and covers by Hugh Fleming.

STAR WARS: X-WING ROGUE SQUADRON

Dark Horse Comics (July 1995 – 1998)

This continuing series stars Wedge Antilles, X-Wing pilot who survived both Death Star missions and now leads the Rogue Squadron. The series is divided into mostly 4-part story arcs, with separate titles, as noted. They are solicited in Diamond Previews as if they were separate 4-issue series, so I have included brief plot descriptions and credits for each arc.

Michael A. Stackpole is the principal writer, with different co-authors and artists on each story arc. He also wrote several of the paperback novelizations.

THE REBEL OPPOSITION

Wedge goes to rescue goes on a rescue mission to the planet Mrlsst, where he joins in an uneasy alliance with the Cilpari natives against the Empire. Tycho Celchu infiltrates the Imperial Forces, but ends up going into battle against his friends. Mike Baron co-authored the series, with art by Allen Nunis and Andy Mushynski and covers by Dave Dorman.

CRAFT AND ACTIVITY TOYS

CRAFT AND ACTIVITY TOYS

In toy industry terminology, Craft and Activity Toys are those that involve painting, coloring, baking, stamping, stickering, etc. MODEL KITS have their own section and coloring books are listed under BOOKS.

CRAFTS

There is some collector interest in the early Kenner items, but whether anybody really collects any other activity toys is questionable. Still, there are some interesting, but generally cartoonish, graphics to be found. Items licensed from Episode I followed the same pattern.

DIE-CAST FIGURES AND SHIPS

Like ceramics, die-cast figures and ships are their own collecting category. Unlike ceramics, die-cast spaceships are figural. However, they are generally not scaled to fit the characters in the same line nor each other. Typically a die-cast Death Star, Star Destroyer and X-Wing are all about the same size. Die-cast figures and ships which were designed for gaming are listed under "Games." See also "Micro" for Kenner's small die-cast figures designed for plastic playsets.

DIE-CAST SHIPS Kenner (1978-80)

Kenner issued die-cast ships on header cards and in open boxes. The latter are much more valuable. Several of the boxed ships also came with backgrounds. These say "Special Offer" prominently in red in a yellow oval on the left and right sides of the package.

Action Masters Collector 6-Pack (Kenner 1994)

ACTION MASTERS Kenner (1994-96)

Kenner's Action Masters figures were issued on a header card with an exclusive trading card. A Predator, two Terminators, four Aliens and several DC Superheroes were also available in the Action Masters series. There was a gold C-3PO available as a free mail-in for six proof of purchase points. I mailed-in but I never received the figure, which is one reason you won't find a picture of it here.

MICRO MACHINE DIE-CAST Galoob (1996-98)

The original packaging for these figures was an oval-shaped header card. The packaging was changed in 1997 to a rectangular card with stripes, similar in design to the action fleet packages (see MicroMachines). The Jawa Sandcrawler was discontinued, however, sufficient stock remained available and in early 1998 I was able to purchase a Sandcrawler at a local Toys "R" Us store for $1.98. Die-cast figures have interested collectors over the years, and these figures, particularly on the original header cards, might turn out to be a good buy at current prices.

DOLLS AND FIGURES

DOLLS

Between 1979 and 1980, Kenner produced a dozen Large Size Action Figures, (i.e. dolls) in window boxes with a flap. All the figures were made to the same 12" scale, but R2-D2 and the Jawa were small characters and so their dolls are about 8" tall, while Chewbacca, Darth Vader and IG-88 were about 15" tall. These are highly prized collectibles, both in and out of box (loose). The Radio Control R2-D2, listed under ELECTRONICS, was made to the same scale as the listed figures.

STAR WARS: COLLECTOR SERIES Kenner (1996–98)

Kenner began issuing Collector Series 12" dolls in 1996. The first series of dolls had a dark blue background card inside the package. In December, light blue cards appeared. Obi-Wan Kenobi was scarce and almost impossible to find in stores from the very first. He was just as difficult to locate later with the light blue backing card. Chewbacca is pictured on the back of the boxes, but he was not included in the initial series. He was scheduled for the second series, but again didn't appear and he did not actually arrive until the fourth series. Instead of Chewbacca, the second series had two Tusken Raiders, with different weapons—one with a blaster and one with a more authentic Gaderffii Stick. Lando Calrissian from this batch did not sell out as quickly as the other dolls and could still be found in many stores well into 1998. There is still at least one for sale at a local Kay-Bee store—almost six years after it first appeared.

Loose, in helmet, cape, scalped Wookiee braids, battle-scarred Madalorian armor and boots, with BlasTech EE-3 blaster rifle, wrist lasers and miniature flame projector, and jet pack. . . . .	25.00

Chewbacca did not appear until the fall 1997, in the fourth batch. The package back depicts the three figures in the earlier assortment (plus Chewbacca) and is unlike the other packages in this assortment, which picture six figures. When Chewbacca did arrive, he was very short-packed in the assortment and only 12" tall, which is not to scale.

Fourth Batch (Asst. #27862, Sept. 1997)

TIE Fighter Pilot (#27864) . . . . .	35.00
Loose, with blaster, chest respirator and wrist comlink . . . . .	12.00
C-3PO (#27865) . . . . .	35.00

Third Series Dolls: Boba Fett out of box, and Princess Leia, box (Kenner 1997)

Collector Series Dolls: Chewbacca (Fourth); Grand Moff Tarkin (Sixth); Chewbacca in Chains (Eighth); and Ponda Baba (Tenth) (Kenner 1997–98 and Hasbro 1999)

Loose, in jumpsuit, belt and rank badge, no weapon . . . . .	12.00
Chewbacca (#27756) . . . . .	80.00
Loose, with bowcaster, pouch and shoulder strap packed with ammo. . . . .	30.00
Chewbacca (#27756) 1996 box . . . . .	500.00

In 1998, the packaging no longer included a front box flap. Gone, too, is the character bio information. However, the quality of the figures has impressed collectors. This is as it should be. Just about the only reason to pay $25.00 or more for a Collector Series doll, is to get a well made, well sculpted, and highly detailed figure.

The three smaller figures seem to have hung around on store shelves for a little longer than the taller ones. R2-D2 was the easiest to find of the three, Yoda was the hardest.

Fifth Batch, Star Wars Trilogy (Asst. #27741, Feb. 1998)

Luke Skywalker in Jedi Gear (#28028) . . . . .	20.00
Loose, with all parts. . . . .	10.00

In 1999, Collector Series Dolls had to compete Episode I figures for shelf space and collector dollars. For the first time there were significant numbers available at discount. Emperor Palpatine from the eighth series and especially Chewbacca "over 13" tall" from the tenth series hung around stores much too long. Earlier versions of Chewbacca had something resembling hair or fur but this one is all plastic. There is still a stack of 25 or so at several local Toys "R" Us stores—where it's still priced at original retail.

EPISODE I DOLLS

The first batch of Episode I dolls was available at one second after midnight, on May 3, 1999, along with all the other figures. I looked for action figures first, then dolls, and all the Darth Maul dolls were gone. I never saw one on the shelf, then or later. The other waves showed up in later months. Most sold well, with the exception of Watto, which can still be found easily at discount. The fifth wave figures are quite scarce at the moment, although there may be a warehouse full somewhere.

POWER OF THE JEDI Hasbro (2001–02)

Episode II, Attack of the Clones figures and dolls will out by the time you read this. The Power of the Jedi line of figures and dolls covers the classic movies and, no doubt, Episode I eventually. Hasbro has put out 300+ action figures, but only 100+ dolls, so it should have little trouble finding new doll batches in the future. On the other hand, collectors may continue to have trouble finding them as distribution has been uneven, at best.

COLLECTOR SERIES — EXCLUSIVES

While all the collectors were looking for the first Chewbacca, some of them were lucky enough to find one or more of the 1997 store exclusives. Many of these had store shelf-lives of less than one day. The first to appear was the Han and Luke Stormtrooper two-pack at Kay-Bee stores. Target stores got an exclusive Luke Skywalker and Wampa, while Toys "R" Us had Han Solo mounted on a Tauntaun. The demand for each figure is different, depending on which stores are nearby. In any given area, exclusive figures from out-of-town stores are usually more in demand, because few, if any, local collectors have one.

Luke Skywalker special 100th figure (Hasbro 2001)

Sometimes Hasbro has sent additional shipments of some of the exclusive dolls and re-issued others as part of its regular Collector Series. The dolls in the additional shipments are identical to the originals and the re-issues differ only slightly from the originals. Also, some unsold specials from other stores have been known to show up at Kay-Bee stores the next year. Many collectors are annoyed that Hasbro even considered reissuing the figures that they were lucky enough to acquire, but feel that it's not such a bad idea for Hasbro to produce a few more of the ones they haven't found yet.

FASHION DOLLS Hasbro (1999–2000)

The "Portrait Edition" dolls are very attractive, in the best Barbie tradition, which may be why they haven't sold all that well to Star Wars collectors. The initial $50.00 price tag may also have had something to do with it. Since way to many were produced, they have all been available at discount for the last few years. Some still are. The quality may be the reason those same collectors change their mind in the future. If so, the discounted price of about $20.00 will be starting price, not the original high price. The "Queen Amidala Collection" dolls are like entry level Barbie dolls. All of them were discounted too.

OTHER FIGURES

BEND-EMS — VINYL — PVC

This category includes most of the figural collectibles other than Action Figures, Ceramics, Die-Cast, Dolls, and Model Kits.

BEND-EMS Just Toys (1993–96)

The Just Toys Star Wars Galaxy Bend-Ems were originally shipped in August 1993 and, by early 1994, they were fairly hot items, since the new action figures had not yet been produced. Trading cards were also popular at that time and each figure was accompanied by a Topps Star Wars Galaxy variant trading card. The package backs offered a redeemable coupon good for two free trading cards: one checklist card, and a special card not available in the retail packs. The earliest package has eight separate pictures of the original figures on the back. Later, as The Emperor, Wicket, Obi-Wan and Han Solo were added, their pictures went on the back as well.

Emperor's Royal Guard Bend-Em (Just Toys 1995)

In mid-1994, the Bend-Ems began arriving without any trading card. That was no fun and before 1995 came around, they had the trading cards back and there were more new figures and new packaging. The card back now had one picture of 20 figures around a Darth Vader 20-piece carry case. 1993 and 1994 figures all came on header cards within a plastic bubble which was shaped to fit the figure snugly. In 1995 this was changed to a stand-up box bubble. The trading card was now inside the box and no longer matched the figure, making it difficult to complete the card series.

The popularity of Bend-Ems declined as the action figures appeared and they received little retail rack space. The trading cards are a separate collectible once the package has been opened. They are listed under "Trading Cards."

PVC FIGURES Applause (1995–98)

Applause started producing its current series of PVC figures in 1995, with its Classic Collector set of six figures. The figures have been available individually at comic shops and party stores. So far a total of 16 have been produced. The figures all come on a circular molded stand which has a date on the bottom. One cost effective way to acquire figures has been the Read-Along Play Pack. These are from Walt Disney Records and include a 24-page storybook with photos, an audiocassette of the story and three PVC figures. These sold for about $10.00, which is only $1.00 more than the retail cost of the figures alone. There are three of these, one for each movie.

VINYL FIGURES Applause (1995–98)

Most of the vinyl figures produced by Applause are sold loose, with only a folded wrist tag or card to identify the figure and contain the UPC code for scanning. The figures are generally available in comic shops and specialty stores like Spencer Gifts, but not in toy stores. They are not articulated, although sometimes the arms or waist allows some motion, but this does not detract from their collectibility. In early 1998, Spencer Gifts was selling much of their stock for about $10.00, making them an attractive purchase. Applause also issued boxed figures of Darth Vader and Luke Skywalker in X-Wing gear, plus a series of boxed resin figurines and dioramas. These are reasonably priced when compared to expensive statues and fine replicas sold by other manufacturers.

STAR WARS BUDDIES Kenner (1997–2000)

Everyone who thinks that Kenner would have made Star Wars Buddies even if Beanie Babies were not enjoying their 15 minutes of collecting fame, please raise your hand. For everyone else, these Beanie Baby knock-offs are either cute and imaginative or a curse, depending on your view of the real thing. Most collectors that I have met do not utter the words “Beanie Babies” without adding an “expletive deleted.” Sadly, some of these guys have actually gone up in value.

COMPLETE GALAXY Kenner (1998)

Each Complete Galaxy figure is a planet or moon which is attached to a base and flips open in the middle to reveal a scene and action figure. I guess they make a nice display, but the only one I like is Endor, with the Ewok and glider. The Ewok makes a neat loose figure. It, and Tatooine with Luke Skywalker, were very scarce, while the first two were quite common.

ELECTRONIC AND COMPUTER

ELECTRONIC AND COMPUTER

This section covers electronic and computer games and toys, plus related items. Other types of games are covered in the GAMES section. The electronic toys generally produce recorded sound effects, music or short sound bites from the movies. Actual sound tracks, audio performances and Star Wars music are listed in the RECORDINGS section. See also the ROLE PLAY section for walkie-talkies and the DOLLS section for electronic, as opposed to radio-controlled, dolls.

ELECTRONIC GAMES AND TOYS

Currently, the predominant manufacturer of Star Wars electronic hand-held games and other items is Tiger Electronics, Inc. By 1997, they had produced a large number of such games, but there were no new ones for 1998, and existing stock was discounted. Many Episode I items were heavily discounted by 2000. Tiger's Stormtrooper Laser Target Game contains a 13½" Stormtrooper figure which has drawn some interest from doll and figure collectors. Kenner's classic radio-controlled R2-D2 is often considered a figure for collecting purposes, since it is made to the same scale as the classic doll series.

FOOD COLLECTIBLES

BREAKFAST FOOD, FAST FOOD, JUNK FOOD, AND PIZZA

Over the years, Star Wars has had promotions with each of the four major food groups—Fast, Junk, Breakfast, and Pizza—not to mention a Pet Food promotion in Australia. These promotions generate a variety of collectibles, from food containers, to toys, to mail-in premiums

BREAKFAST FOOD

Every toy collector should start off with a hearty breakfast. General Mills, who owned Kenner at the time, started promotions off with various Star Wars Cheerios boxes beginning in 1978. This was probably the high point of Star Wars food products, nutrition-wise, until the 1997 Taco Bell promotion. From then on the offers were on cereals like Boo Berry, Count Chocula and Lucky Charms. Star Wars moved to Kellogg's in 1984 and C-3PO got his own cereal. Finally, in 1996 Froot Loops had its highly successful Han Solo Stormtrooper action figure offer. Toocan Sam and R2-D2—perfect together. The boxes are just as collectible as the premiums.

Listed prices are for complete and clean boxes. A complete box has all four top flaps, all four sides (no missing coupons) and all four bottom flaps. A box that has the top and bottom flaps opened is a “collapsed” box (but still complete). A “Flat” is a mint (usually a file copy) unused cereal box. A flat commands up to 40% more than the listed price.

If you liked a little toast with your cereal, you should have bought Wonder Bread. They offered a series of Star Wars trading cards in 1977. Look for them in the TRADING CARDS section.

FAST FOOD

The 1970s and 1980s promotions of choice with fast food restaurants were glasses and plastic cups. The most famous of these promotions were the Burger King/Coke four-glass sets sold for each of the three movies. Coke also produced a number of collector plastic cups which were distributed in various fast food chains, both national and regional.

Taco Bell ran a promotion in late 1996 and early 1997 in conjunction with the release of the Star Wars Trilogy Special Edition films. There were a lot of neat toys to collect, along with boxes plus a wrapper and bag. The best part for me is that I get paid to show you pictures of them in this book, enjoy the tacos, and deduct the cost of the meals and toys, all while telling my wife that its not just an excuse to eat at fast food restaurants. This worked for the pizza, Pepsi, and junk food just as well.

The toys each came in a plastic bag, with a two page booklet encouraging you to "collect all seven!" They cost about a buck each, but the taco wrapper, bag, or box was free.

EPISODE I FAST FOOD

Star Wars Episode I The Phantom Menace was so big it took three, count them—THREE, restaurant chains to distribute its fast food toys—Pizza Hut, KFC, and Taco Bell. I gained at least 10 pounds just collecting them, and that was before I started in on the potato chips bags and pepsi cans. All of the restaurant's fast food toys were made by Applause and were listed on their Web site, and a poster from Star Wars Galaxy Collector magazine. All of the toys came in pictorial boxes which could be put together to form a poster scene. Each restaurant had four figural plastic drink toppers for sale. KFC also had two flying disks, i.e. frisbees, which doubled as chicken bucket toppers. In addition, you could collect paper drink cups with movie pictures and plastic soda cups at the movies.

JUNK FOOD

With any food product, the collectible is the container, and any premium, but not the food. The collectible value of the Pepsi cartons, or the Lay's Potato Chip bags listed below are about 90% less if they are not complete. Empty is okay, but cutouts are not, meaning that you can't have a mint bag or box and send away for the mail-in premium too.

STAR WARS TRILOGY SODA

Pepsi had a number of promotional plastic bottles and 12-pack and 24-pack cartons available for the Star Wars Trilogy Special Edition movies. The cartons had an offer for three posters for $9.99 plus the order form on the back of the carton. Pepsi also issued various coasters and travel cups related to the trilogy.

EPISODE I SODA

Pepsi put out 24 different soda cans in conjunction with Episode I: The Phantom Menace. Pepsico generated a lot of initial interest with promo cans, available as internal giveaways. They were sealed, but empty, so they are easy to distinguish from the regular cans. Each came in a white box.

The regular 24 cans were not randomly distributed. Rather, each 12-pack or 24-pack had only one style of can in it. Collectors should note that cans from different Pepsi Bottlers will have different deposit/recycle information and may list the state, so there are differences between the cans.

Pepsi Promo Can #1 with Box (Pepsi 1999)

The list below, taken from the boxes and confirmed by the cans should be all of them, but isn't. Somewhere I happened on a Seven-Up can with #19 Nute Gunray pictured! Wrong brand and wrong number, so there must be more around.

POTATO CHIPS

Lay's Potato Chips had a popular promotion for the Star Wars Trilogy Special Edition movies. The UPC symbol from two bags of chips plus $1.99 got you the Spirit of Obi-Wan action figure. It's a 3fl" blue-green semi-translucent plastic figure of Obi-Wan and came in a plastic bag in a plain white mailing box with "SKU #69736" on it. The figure does have the magic "Kenner" name on the bottom, but it has no discernable action. The main reason it gets listed with the action figures in many magazines is that the Froot Loops Han Solo in Stormtrooper Disguise mail-in, which really is an action figure, gets listed and so they think this mail-in should be too. It belongs in this section, with figures like the Taco Bell under three years old Yoda figure listed above.

Lay's also put out a lot of its 1999 product line in Episode I bags. Naturally I forced myself to munch some so I could save the bags – purely in the interest of Collecting Science I assure you. The bags also came with a collectible game card.

PIZZA

In late 1996 and early 1997, Pizza Hut sold its take-out pizzas in coloring boxes with Star Wars pictures promoting the Star Wars Special Edition movies. The boxes are 12½" square. Too bad they didn't change their company logo to read "Pizza Hutt" for the promotion and use a picture of their "founder," Jabba the Hutt, on the boxes.

Australian "Pizza Hutterers" did a little better. In 1995 they got a series of four PVC figures bagged with interlocking cardboard backdrops. The series was distributed to comic shops in the United States through Diamond's Previews catalog/magazine, which is why it is listed in this book. The figures are a little smaller than the U.S. PVC figures made by Applause, and have jagged yellow bases. Incidentally, there is nothing on any of the figures, bags, or backdrops which says "Australia" and all the text is in English.

GAMES AND PUZZLES

GAMES

Kenner made the first Star Wars games, as well as a variety of jigsaw puzzles, bop bags, vans, and of course, action figures. Many of these were advertised in their various mini-catalogs that came in the boxes for the vehicles. Parker Bros. started making the games in about 1983 and continues to do so today. Kenner is now part of Hasbro as is Parker Bros.

PUZZLES

The earliest puzzles came in blue or purple-bordered boxes. Later they were switched to black borders. Several are advertised in Kenner's mini-catalogs. They are among the earliest Kenner products, since it is fairly easy to put a Star Wars picture on an existing jigsaw pattern and add a box. You have to sculpt an action figure before it can go into production. Kenner jigsaw puzzles are not titled. The box contained the movie logo, the puzzle's picture and the number of pieces.

ROLE PLAY GAMES

West End Games began producing role playing games in the Star Wars universe in 1987. This was in the middle of the dark age, when there were no more action figures produced and no new Star Wars novels or comics. During this period, they were the only company keeping the Star Wars saga alive with anything like new Star Wars storylines.

Role playing games have their own section in most book stores. As such, their books and boxed sets are generally available. They have to compete with CCGs (Customizable Card Games) for the game fanatic's attention. Their fanatics accumulate game modules, rule books, and other items in order to (gasp!) play the games, not collect them. New and revised editions of rule books are much more useful than original editions. The consequences of this are that most of these items, even in near mint condition, are worth little more than their original price!

GAMING MINIATURES

West End Games (1988–97)

West End Games produced 25mm lead miniature figures to accompany its games starting in 1988. They are not heavily collected by non-gamers. They were, however, popular with modelers, who paint and display them. There are 14 boxed sets, usually containing 10 figures, which were produced from 1988 to 1991. All of the figures came with statistics for use with West End's role playing games. Bob Charrette and Julie Guthrie were credited as sculptors on the first ten packs, while Jonathan Woods sculpted the last four. In 1993, West End Games began producing three-figure blister packs of figures. They have made over fifty different packs to date, and several sets of ships.

Invasion of Theed Adventure Game (Hasbro/Wizards of the Coast 2000)

NEW ROLE PLAY GAMES

Hasbro/Wizards of the Coast now produces Star Wars role play games. The Invasion of Theed game has been a popular collectible for non-games because of the exclusive Wookiee action figure. Whether this results in more gaming remains to be seen.

CUSTOMIZABLE CARD GAMES

Customizable Card Games (CCGs) are one of the 1990s hottest items. There are many players around and lots of new product. Many of the playing cards are quite valuable. The primary reasons for this are scarcity and play value in the game. Scarcity is always a factor in value, but the other factor is usually some kind of intrinsic desirability or charisma in the item. The simple truth is that game cards are not great art, and even if they were great art, too much of the card is taken up by the game text for one to appreciate the art.

As long as the game is played, scarce cards will be valuable. When the world moves on to the next game, they may not be quite so valuable. But then, as Dennis Miller says, that's just my opinion, I could be wrong.

PREMIERE SET

This initial card set is based on characters and events from the first Star Wars movie. It was introduced in December 1995 and was long awaited by Customizable Card Game enthusiasts. It was available in 60-card starter decks, and there are 324 cards in all, divided between light and dark sides. The game is a struggle between the light and dark sides. Each player wields a 60-card deck, either light or dark and the object is to reduce your opponents original force of 60, to zero.

Decipher also offered a variety of additional items for the discriminating player-collector. A few of the cards were corrected, and players could mail in the old card for a replacement. The first of these was the Dagobah Asteroid Sanctuary card, which didn't work properly in game play. You could also get this card in Scrye magazine. Decipher intends to continue to produce and distribute the card, so only the error version should become a collectible. Another replaceable card was the R-3PO card from the Hoth expansion set. It had the wrong image on it (same as the K-3PO card) and you can get a replacement by mail. This is a limited card, so Decipher will destroy the error card when you mail it in and keep the total number in existence at a constant 110,000. The cards have the same play value, but over time there will be more correct cards and less error cards. You can always turn an error card into a correct card for the price of a stamped, self-addressed envelope, but not the other way around.

Decipher distributed Rebel Leader Cards as convention giveaways. There is nothing like a show special freebee to get people to come to your booth. You could also mail-in for one, for $1.00 each, for a short time at the end of 1997 and beginning of 1998. Jedi Packs are available the same way, but without time limit.

Jedi Pack, 11 cards . . . . .	5.00
Rebel Leader Checklist, 2 cards . . . . .	2.75

Unfortunately (for Decipher anyway) Wizards of the Coast now has the exclusive license to produce collectible card games. Decipher's license has lapsed and it can't sell any more cards after April 30, 2002. Since all of its existing stock must be sold, prices will be depressed, at least for the moment. My local comic book and gaming shop says the cards are worth squat, or perhaps less than squat, but certainly not more. If so, the prices listed here may be too high. In any event, primary collecting interest is in the black-border limited series cards.

STAR WARS 2-PLAYER CUSTOMIZABLE CARD GAME Parker Brothers (Feb. 1996)

The Premiere two-player game was introduced in February 1996 and is distributed by Parker Brothers. That means that it found its way into toy stores. The box includes a Light Side and a Dark Side deck, each comprised of 60 common cards, plus a 15-card expansion pack. It's designed to provide the two players with everything they need to begin play. There are three Luke Skywalker and three Darth Vader cards which are exclusive to this set, although they are common within the set. The first 50,000 games distributed had a limited edition expansion pack, while later boxes had unlimited packs.

Star Wars 2-Players Customizable Card Game, licensed from Decipher (#40360, 1996) . . . . .	$20.00

THE EMPIRE STRIKES BACK INTRODUCTORY TWO-PLAYER GAME

The Empire Strikes Back two-player game was introduced in March 1997 and is also distributed by Parker Brothers. It's the second of a series of three, but I wouldn't bet against others based on the new movies. There are seven unique cards in the set.

Box Set: . . . . .	$20.00

HOUSEHOLD

HOUSEHOLD

This household section covers Star Wars items for use in the Bathroom, Bedroom, Kitchen, and other rooms in a house, as well as holiday and party items. See also CERAMICS and ELECTRONICS AND COMPUTER.

BATHROOM

Bathroom products include soaps, grooming products, and towels. Some of the combs are designed to be carried in your pocket and some of the towels are designed for the beach, but they are still listed here. Many collectors have one or more of these items in their collections, but they do not seem to be looking for more of them so as to have, for example, every Star Wars towel. They just treat what they have as part of their "other Star Wars stuff."

BEDROOM

Star Wars bedding was popular from 1978 to 1984 and a variety of sheets, pillowcases, blankets, bedspreads and curtains were made. Most collectors are happy if they still have the ones they slept on as kids, but don't seem to be particularly interested in acquiring the same items in original condition. The problem, I suppose, is that there is little that you can do with a sheet if you don't sleep on it, and if you do sleep on it, it would lose its value as a collectible. For this reason, sheets and similar items, in original packaging are worth, at most, about the same as a new Star Wars sheet in its packaging. Your old sheets may be worth something to you, but probably not to anyone else.

Star Wars sleep products made a comeback in 1997 and new ones are available. You can order just about anything you would want from the Jawa Trader, (i.e. the Official Star Wars Fan Club). Just pick up a copy of Star Wars Insider magazine. More sleep products will undoubtedly come out in time for the new movies. Your kids, or grandkids or nephews will probably want to sleep on the new ones, but you still won't have much you can do with the old designs. If collector interest picks up, today's popular characters such as Boba Fett would probably be the ones to look for.

OTHER ROOMS

Most Star Wars furniture, rugs, and wastebaskets were initially designed for kids' bedrooms or playrooms, but now that those kids have grown up, or at least gotten older, and have their own houses and apartments, Star Wars items can be found all over the house.

HOLIDAY AND PARTY

Hallmark has made collectible Christmas ornaments for many years. In 1991, they discovered Star Trek, but they neglected to tell any Star Trek fans. Many of them wanted the initial ornament, but none of them had one, so the price went through the roof. Next year Hallmark actually advertised the ornament on "The Next Generation" TV show. They sold lots of ornaments and so they branched out into superheroes. In 1996, Hallmark discovered the marketing hype for the Star Wars Trilogy Special Edition movies and produced ... a grand total of one ornament! They have released four or five every year since. The best way to buy them has been to wait until just after Christmas, when they go on sale or 50% or more off.

MASKS, HELMETS AND COSTUMES

MASKS, HELMETS AND COSTUMES

Mask and Costume collecting extends far beyond Star Wars. Just about every famous or infamous person and fictional character has appeared on some type of Halloween costume over the years. Classic monsters, superheroes, and science fiction characters have always been popular and Star Wars provides a host of interesting mask and costume possibilities. Both masks and costumes appeared in 1977, months before there were any Star Wars action figures.

MASKS AND HELMETS

Don Post Studios has always made the high-end masks — those designed for adults and for display, rather than for a child's Halloween costume. Lately they have added hands and collector helmets to their line-up. They also produce deluxe replica helmets, which are listed under STATUES.

COSTUMES

Ben Cooper was the most famous maker of collectible Halloween costumes in the 1970s and 1980s. All of their product was made for kids. This means that it was made, and sold, inexpensively and was not initially designed as a collectible. Therefore, old costumes in prime condition are hard to find.

Rubies currently makes Halloween costumes for the same market. Their current crop of classic Star Wars items may never receive much collector attention, since it must compete with the Ben Cooper originals and with the Don Post Studios higher quality.

MICRO FIGURES AND VEHICLES

STAR WARS MICRO COLLECTION Kenner (1982)

Kenner's Micro Collection consists of plastic playsets and plastic vehicles for use with 1" die-cast figures. The nine playsets could be bought individually or grouped into three "Worlds:" Hoth Ice Planet, Bespin Cloud City, and Death Star. With nine playsets and three worlds you might think that there would be three playsets per world, but you would be wrong. There were two Death Star playsets, three Bespin playsets, and four Hoth playsets. The Hoth Generator Attack set was omitted from the Hoth World group.

There were two ships in the original Micro Line: The X-Wing Fighter and the TIE Fighter. Each had a pilot and a crash feature so that it suffered battle damage at the push of a button along with battle damage stickers. Two exclusive ships were offered in 1983—the Millennium Falcon was a Sears exclusive, while the Rebel Armored Snowspeeder was a JC Penney exclusive.

There was also two mail-in "Build Your Armies" set of six figures, offered on specially marked boxes with the usual proof of purchase. Certain Kellogg's C-3PO cereal boxes had a mail-in offer for four figures. The offer was good through August 31, 1985, and was fulfilled with existing stock.

All of the die-cast figures have product numbers on the base or body. They are given below to aid in identification of loose figures. Die-cast ships are not listed here. They are in the DIE-CAST section.

MICROMACHINES

Galoob (1993–98)
“Think Big, Play Small”

The Galoob Star Wars MicroMachines collection debuted in 1994, as part of their “Space” segment. At the time, Star Wars was the hottest collectible going, but very few new items had started to appear other than the JustToys Star Wars Bend-Ems. The first batch of MicroMachines contained a three ship set for each of the three movies. The earliest ones have a 1993 Lucasfilm Ltd. copyright, an individual movie logo in the front, and only list the first three series on the back (3-back). These were reissued when the next three items were released, with a generic “Star Wars” logo on the front, a 1994 copyright, and list all six series on the back (6-back). All were issued on rectangular header cards as part of MicroMachines “Space” series.

By April 1996 they were replaced by the Star Wars Vehicle Collection, which also said “Space” on its original packages, but had different figures in the numbered collections and different UPC codes. Packaging was then changed to omit “Space” and just say “Star Wars.” Packaging was changed again in 1997 to a striped design, similar to the stripes on the Action Fleet packages.

All of the MicroMachines have small parts and small figures, so most of them are destined to an ignominious defeat at the hands of mom’s vacuum cleaner. This will make completing any loose set very difficult. The larger X-Ray fleet and the even larger Action Fleet ships are covered below. See also DIE-CAST for Galoob’s MicroMachine Die-Cast ships.

FIGURES
Galoob (1996–98)

The first Star Wars MicroMachine figure sets appeared in 1996, at the same time that the "Action Fleet" vehicles appeared. Each of those vehicles included a couple of small figures and the figure sets fleshed-out the line. The first ones came in packaging similar to the small vehicles listed above, and later they were reissued on header cards which featured stripes. At about this time the third batch of figures was produced and this group included a redesigned set of classic characters.

Classic Characters, original poses (Galoob 1997)

Rebel Transport playset, includes X-Wing Starfighter and three figures (#65996) . . . . .	11.00

TRANSFORMING ACTION PLAYSETS

Originally these were a helmet or head-shape which transforms into a playset. The reissues were available at very reasonable prices during the big Star Wars discount sale and make a nice-looking collection in a head-hunter sort of way. Later a few ships were added. The same concept was used for some Episode I heads.

Reissues, in stripe design packaging . . . . .	10.00

MICROMACHINE X-RAY FLEET Galoob (1996–97)

X-Ray Fleet vehicles are the same size as Galoob's die-cast vehicles and considerably bigger than the regular MicroMachine size, but still a lot smaller than their Action Fleet ships. For me, it's a very attractive size, because I can appreciate the details without a magnifying glass.

The outer hull of each X-Ray Fleet ship is clear plastic, allowing the collector to view the inner portions of each vehicle. This only really works if the inside portions correspond to the known insides of the ship, as seen in the movies. Some of the X-Ray Fleet correspond fairly well to the movie version, notably the Imperial AT-AT and AT-ST, but most are not so successful.

The Star Wars Trilogy Gift Set includes only one X-Ray Fleet ship, the Shuttle Tydirium. The other nine ships are the same size as the X-Ray Fleet (and Die-Cast ships) but are painted. This set was originally a JC Penney exclusive, but left over sets found their way to KayBee Toys and sold for $15.00. That's where I got mine.

ACTION FLEET VEHICLES Galoob (1996–98)

Action Fleet vehicles are larger than Galoob's X-Ray fleet and die-cast vehicles, but still smaller than Kenner's action figure vehicles. It has proven to be a popular size with both kids and collectors.

The first 2,500 pieces, from the production run of each of the first batch vehicles, were numbered with a special blue collector's sticker. The Rebel Snowspeeder was short packed in the assortment.

In 1997, Galoob introduced Series Alpha, which included both an original concept design vehicle and the familiar final design vehicle, along with two figures. This is one of the only ways to collect design prototypes, but some see it as just a gimmick to get them to buy another copy of a vehicle that they already own.

Galoob has also produced a number of battle packs and playsets which include figures and accessories on the same scale as the ships.

MODEL KITS

MODEL KITS

MPC was Kenner's model kit company. Early kits have their logo. When The Ertl Company bought MPC in about 1990, the logo was changed to MPC/Ertl. Still later, the logo was changed to AMT/Ertl, which is what it is today. The original models have been reissued, and this availability has brought down the collectors' price of the originals. The most notable exception is the original Millennium Falcon, with lights, since the reissues are unlighted.

PAPER COLLECTIBLES

CALENDARS — CATALOGS — MAGAZINES — POINT OF PURCHASE AND STORE DISPLAYS — PROOFS

This section includes all kinds of miscellaneous paper collectibles which don't fit in other sections; Books, Comics, Trading Cards, and Wall Art (posters, lithos, etc.) are all covered in their own sections; and Customizable Card Games can be found at the end of the GAMES section.

BOOKMARKS AND BOOKPLATES

Many bookmarks and bookplates contain attractive art work; but as collectibles, they are associated with books, and book collecting is not the driving force behind Star Wars collecting. This has kept the price of these items at, or near, original retail price.

CALENDARS

Calendars were only made for a few years when the movies first appeared. Since 1995, calendars have been sold every year and you can bet this will continue. Calendars appear in about July of the year before the year printed on the calendar, and by December they are available at discount and by January they are discounted heavily. If you intend to collect them, wait to get them at half price and don't unseal them.

CATALOGS

Kenner issued two kinds of catalogs which covered Star Wars toys. The best known are the small pocket or consumer catalogs included in most of the vehicle packages. They were issued for all three movies and contain interesting pictures and early information which is not always accurate to what was actually produced. The larger retailer catalogs were given to the stores to get them to order Star Wars toys. Catalogs such as this are issued every year or more frequently by just about every toy company and are often available at Toy Fair, at least to the press and retailers. As you might expect, the earlier catalogs sell for more than the later ones.

Every toy company with a Star Wars license has a catalog, but most of the collector interest focuses on Kenner. The Kenner Fall 1977 Star Wars catalog features the Early Bird Certificate Package and naturally pre-dates it, since the retailer must buy the toy before it gets in the toy store for the consumer to purchase. This makes it the very first Kenner collectible, but hardly the first Star Wars collectible. After all, the paperback book and the first Marvel comics appeared before the movie premiere. Sears Wish Books (Christmas Catalogs) are also interesting because they feature the Sears exclusives, which are some of the most valuable collectibles.

One of Kenner's more interesting Star Wars catalogs is from the 1986 Toy Fair. This is the last one to contain Star Wars merchandise until the mid 1990s revival of the line. The 1986 catalog covers the Droids and Ewoks lines and includes pictures of a number of figures which were never actually released.

LOBBY CARDS

Lobby cards are large prints containing scenes from a movie, or pictures of the stars which, as the name implies, were designed for display in the lobby of a movie theater. They are 11" x 14" in size and come in sets of eight different cards. Lobby cards are produced for every movie, just like movie posters (covered under "WALL ART") and they are standard sizes because the theater can't change its display spaces for each movie. Theaters are also sent sets of 8" x 10" photo cards, and frequently star and scene photos in larger sizes.

Star Wars lobby cards, photo cards, and similar items can generally be acquired from dealers who specialize in lobby cards and posters from movies. Since there is ongoing collector interest in movie memorabilia, these items are not thrown away. There is also no great secret to collecting them. Lobby cards from popular movies with famous stars are naturally worth more than ones from movies you refuse to watch on free television, and bigger cards are worth more than smaller ones. However, popular movies like Star Wars play for a long time in a lot of theaters and are re-released too, meaning that more lobby cards, photo cards, and similar items are produced, and that more are saved by collectors.

MAGAZINES

There have been several magazines devoted exclusively, or almost exclusively, to Star Wars—almost as many as Leonardo DiCaprio has today. The only surprising part is that some of these magazines were started more than a decade after the last movie had come and gone. Magazines covering collectibles, general interest, and humor are covered immediately following those which exclusively featured Star Wars.

MAGAZINES: COLLECTIBLES

Many collector magazines have run Star Wars covers. The prices in the listing below are for newsstand versions—those without promotional giveaways such as trading cards and posters. However, many of these collector magazines came with Star Wars promos polybagged with the magazine. Magazines with their original promos can be worth a lot more money, depending on the collectibility of the item, but they can often be found, bagged and complete, at reduced prices in comics shops or at shows. Most promo cards, along with their source, are listed in the TRADING CARDS section. Use this as your guide when bargain hunting.

The following is a sampling of collector and distributor magazines with Star Wars covers. There are undoubtedly many others.

MAGAZINES: GENERAL

Mass market Collectible #3 is the issue of Time magazine (May 30, 1977) which appeared a few days before the movie opened and featured a two-page spread praising the movie as the best picture of the year. The movie opened on a Friday and it wasn't hard to get a ticket for the first evening showing. There was a long line for the second showing and for every showing thereafter for many months.

The value of old magazines generally depends on the cover photo or painting. The Star Wars movies have generated hundreds, perhaps thousands, of magazine covers. When something is popular, everybody wants it on their cover. In addition to obvious magazines, like those that cover the movies generally, or science fiction movies, or special effects, magazines like People will tell you about the sad love life or happy home life of the stars, while financial magazines will tell you about all the money the movie is making. There is probably some Bounty Hunter trade magazine that elected Boba Fett their "Hunter of the Year." There may even be a health food magazine suggesting that Jabba the Hutt could slim down a bit by eating "free range" live creatures, instead of fat domestic ones as seen in the movie.

The list below includes "selections" which I forthrightly admit is merely a euphemism for "the ones that I have photos of" plus the original Time magazine issue, which I haven't yet found to photo. I wanted to include some of the photos, so I needed to have a short listing. Generally the covers are photos from the movie, or photos of the stars. Often the photos are promotional releases provided by Lucasfilms, but magazines like to get their own, exclusive, photos if they can.

MAGAZINES: HUMOR

Personally, I enjoy humorous take-offs of the movies and TV shows that I like. The quintessential humor magazine (of course I mean Mad Magazine) has done quite a few Star Wars issues. As with any magazine, it is the appearance of Star Wars on the cover that makes it a Star Wars collectible.

POINT OF PURCHASE DISPLAYS

Before a Star Wars product gets to the consumer, it has to be designed, manufactured, packaged, shipped, and displayed for purchase in your local store. Just about every part of this process produces something that could be, and frequently is, collected.

The design process yields product and packaging prototypes and proofs or samples. Prototypes are internal items, available only to company employees, LucasArts' licensing people (for approval) and possibly advertising agencies. You really have to know somebody to get them initially. Proofs and samples are often more widely available, because they often reach salesmen and store buyers. If you don't have an actual finished sample product to show to the buyers, you may, at least, have a packaging proof to convince them that the item will be a hot seller.

Shipping yields boxes, but they are usually simple light brown corrugated items with black labels, of no real visual interest. Stores throw them away, or give them away if you ask for them. A number of collectors store their Star Wars action figures in the original boxes, because they have been designed for this purpose and are just the right size, but they do not consider the boxes to be part of the collection and they have never attracted much of a market for themselves.

Somebody must have boxes from the original shipments of Star Wars action figures in 1978, or perhaps a complete set of shipping boxes from the current figures, #69570.01 to #69570.99. Who knows? Maybe they will turn out to be quite valuable someday.

Point of Purchase displays and store signs are much more interesting. They are designed to attract your attention, so they are colorful. They display the product just as nicely in your room as they did in the store. And, best of all, they are items that were never intended to be sold to the general public in the first place, so not everybody has one.

Generally, point of purchase items are not collected so as to acquire an entire set. Rather, a few are acquired to form a backdrop or focal point for the display of one's collection.

STORE DISPLAYS

Kenner, and every other large manufacturer, makes displays to promote their products at the point of purchase. If they have a contest or giveaway promotion, they will want to let you know about it. These come in all sizes and shapes and are frequently made of cardboard. They are hanging or standing or sitting on or over the rack where the toy or other items are selected, or in the store's window. Over the years a lot of them have been produced and many more are to come. Size and artwork are important components of their collectable value, along with the importance of the product they promote. Displays for Kenner's action figures rank at the top.

Since the displays go to stores, it helps to work there if you want to collect them. Undoubtedly many displays are damaged in use or simply thrown away at the end of the promotion; however, there are thousands of stores that sell action figures and each store gets a reasonable supply, so initial print runs have to be 25,000 to 50,000 minimum for ordinary items. This tends to keep the price within reason. Signs and displays that are flat look very nice when framed and make a handsome addition to your collection.

Star Wars Action Figure sign (1978–80) depending on size . . . . . $100–250

The Empire Strikes Back Action Figure sign (1980–1982) depending on size . . . . . 75–125

Return of the Jedi Action Figure sign (1983–1984) depending on size . . . . . 40–90

The most valuable store display is quite recent. In the fall of 1997 many Toys “R” Us stores got a four-foot hanging Millennium Falcon, made in plastic and looking just like a scaled up version of the toy. Only 500 were supposed to be made and they were given away in a drawing by Rosie

O'Donnell. You could enter the drawing with a one dollar contribution to her charitable foundation. I entered, but didn't win. You probably entered too. The contest entry forms estimated the value of the item at $500.00, but I would think $2,500.00 would be closer. When you entered, did you think where you would store the item if you won? Of course not, because you just wanted to win one. The store display for the contest is a nice consolation collectible. It shows the Falcon in a reversed picture.

Rebel Soldier, Hoth Power of the Force card proof (Kenner 1985)

PROOFS

A few header card proofs are made for every action figure, so that design personnel, company executives and others can check the graphics, weigh the sales appeal of the package, and generally bless the product. Everybody wants to get into the act and justify their job, so changes are frequent and often the proof is not quite like the final package. This makes them quite interesting collectibles. The most valuable proofs are those for products that were never made, or where the design was changed in some significant way. After that, the value of proofs varies with the value of the final figure.

ACTION FIGURE CARD PROOFS

The most famous of these changes in the Star Wars world was the retitling of the third movie from Revenge of the Jedi to Return of the Jedi. No product was actually released with a Revenge of the Jedi package, but the original name is mentioned on a number of packages and in magazines, and action figure card proofs exist which have the Revenge of the Jedi logo. These are the most highly sought of the card proofs, since it is about as close as one can come to an actual Revenge of the Jedi product. They sell for about $150, for a minor character, up to $250, for a major character.

Yoda Revenge of the Jedi card proof (Kenner 1982)

COVER PROOFS

Cover Proofs are to books what card proofs are to action figures. They are sent to retailers, along with the publishers monthly catalog, to help solicit orders. You may not be able to “tell” a book by its cover, but you sure can “sell” a book by its cover. I have seen dust jacket proofs for hardcover books, but most cover proofs are from paperback and trade paperback books. All of them have the corner clipped and/or a small hole punched in them to prevent them being returned for credit by the retailer as unsold copies (unsold paperbacks are not returned to the publisher—the retailer rips off the front cover and returns it instead).

I only know of a couple of people who actually collect cover proofs, but they do contain nice cover artwork. The cover proof for the original Star Wars paperback book would be the very first thing with the title Star Wars which was actually produced. Since I am calling the actual paperback “Collectible #1,” I suppose it would be “Collectible #0.”

OTHER PROOFS

Just about every Star Wars product ever made has generated some kind of printing proof, sample, prototype or similar item. There is also an original piece of artwork or an original photo for every trading card, comic book cover, comic book interior page, paperback cover, hardcover dustjacket, poster, lobby card, video tape box, record jacket, video game box, T-shirt design, or other artistic product or product package. For every original piece of art, there is probably a concept drawing or sketch that went to the art director for approval before the artist did the actual drawing or painting.

The packaging proofs and prototypes for Kenner products, particularly action figures, command high prices today, and will probably always top the list. However, there are a very, very large number of proofs, prototypes, and even originals for other products that were created and someone associated with the company has them. Maybe they even want to throw them away or give them away. Ask around in your area. Don't forget to check the local stores for signs. They won't have much use for it when the promotion is over. The right trash can make a very nice collectible.

STAND-UPS

Standeers are near lifesize cardboard figures, designed as store displays and sold by Advanced Graphics. Comic shops and other stores buy them and some dealers get them to highlight their table at shows. Nobody seems to collect them, but if you want one, they are available for their retail price of about $25.00 (maybe a little less for smaller figures, like R2-D2 and Yoda). The same goes for your favorite Star Trek figure, movie star or sports hero (maybe a little less for jockeys, girl Olympic acrobats, Danny DeVito, and Mugsy Bogues.)

RECORDINGS AND STILLS

RECORDINGS

AUDIO — MUSIC — VIDEO

All of the movies have been adapted as radio plays and many of the new novels and even a few of the comic books have become books on tape. There is collector interest in the former, particularly in the National Public Radio dramatizations. It is not yet clear whether books on tape are collected, in the sense that older tapes will go up in value, or whether Star Wars fans buy tapes to play, in which case newer formats with the next generation of sound quality enhancements will always be more desirable than older tapes.

MUSIC SOUNDTRACKS

If you can't hum the Star Wars theme by John Williams you probably bought this book by mistake. While you can get the various movie soundtracks on 8 track tape, on cassettes and in other formats, the collectible items are the original soundtrack LP albums. Obviously you would like to get ones that were never played and are still in their original shrink wrap. Of course, shrinkwrapping equipment is not too expensive and so shrinkwrap on a product is not a guarantee of anything. Just about every other format and every other record, whether performed by the Boston Pops, the Utah Symphony Orchestra, the Biola University Symphony Band or the Electric Moog Orchestra can be had for under $20.00. Of course, if it has a colorful insert, its worth a little more.

The Empire Strikes Back soundtrack album back (RSO 1980)

VIDEOTAPES

The three Star Wars movies are available in original and special editions and in letterbox and pan and scan formatted for your television set, which, as you should know, has a much different aspect ratio than a widescreen movie. Like all special effects movies, Star Wars is much better seen in a movie theater than on TV. Video tapes were released over the years with different box art and they can be collected for the art, but few people do so. Collectors who have videotapes of the movie got them to watch, not collect. Collectors who have Droids and Ewoks video tapes got them for their kids to watch, not themselves. My grandson liked the Ewok tape which I found for a buck. He was four years old. Hey! Start 'em young.

Empire Strikes Back Film Frame, Yoda Edition
(Willitts Designs 1995)

STILLS

FILM FRAMES Willitts Designs (1995–97)

Film Frames are a full screen, letterbox movie image, with a one-of-a-kind 70mm film frame, in a 7½" x 2¾" acrylic holder. They are sold by Willitts Designs, who also produced the limited edition lithographs by Ralph McQuarrie (listed under WALL ART). The retail price of these strips is $24.95, but dealers have been offering them for as little as $15.00 and they still have some left. They are the only way that a collector can own an actual piece of the film. Each "edition" is numbered and limited to 9,500 sets, but each frame is unique since only a single 70mm print of the film was cut up.

PHOTOS

The best way to get a signed photograph is to find a show where your favorite star is appearing and go and get the autograph yourself. I can guarantee you that there will be someone at the show selling photos of him or her. This gives you good memories—and a genuine collectible. It won't be free, but then what is? If several stars are available, make the person you dragged to the show wait in the long line for the major stars' autograph, while you get autographs from several of the lesser stars. Their lines will be shorter, and they might even sign multiple items.

Photos of your favorite star from Star Wars are also available from a variety of sources. Their value on the market depends more on their movie star status as of today, than on their role in the movie. Consequently, Harrison Ford's autographed photo is expensive, but not the others. The price list below is designed to give you a baseline for evaluating any photo that you wish to purchase, or sell. They are for standard 8" x 10" photos, double matted and ready for framing, with a certificate of authenticity. If the item you are considering buying at a dealer's table, or from an advertisement or cable TV show, is reasonably priced, go ahead and buy it—but don't expect to sell it later at a huge profit.

ROLEPLAY TOYS

ROLE PLAY TOYS

Role play toys include weapons, communicators, armor, utility belts, and similar items which are full size, or sized for a kid to play with. They are hardly a new idea. Every movie serial and TV Western hero, from the time of Hopalong Cassidy, Roy Rogers, and the Lone Ranger onwards had cap guns, holsters, hats, boots and all manner of full-sized licensed products. It's action figures that are the new idea. Nobody figured out how to sell dolls to boys until the mid 1960s.

With all the different weapons used in the trilogy, it's a miracle there aren't a lot more Star Wars role play weapons. There are lightsabers, pistols, and laser rifles. The first Chewbacca Bowcaster arrived in mid 1997, and there are no weapons yet for any of the bounty hunters or Mos Eisley Cantina aliens, except for Boba Fett's armor. Maybe it's just as well. I suppose we'd lose too many little sisters if Kenner made a life-size Carbon-Freezing Chamber.

With so little product, collector interest in the few classic items is quite high. As yet, there has been little collector interest in the 1990s items and they can all be acquired for around their original retail prices. The only exception is the Boba Fett Armor Set which has been scarce, and expensive.

SCHOOL AND OFFICE SUPPLIES

SCHOOL AND OFFICE SUPPLIES

You awaken from a sound sleep on your Star Wars sheets, and outfit yourself from head to toe with Star Wars clothing. Are you ready to go forth to do battle with the faceless minions of an evil empire? Are you? Okay, well in that case you will just have to go to school, or to work and pretend that your teacher is Emperor Palpatine or your boss is Darth Vader. Actually, this may not be much of a stretch, in which case you will need to outfit yourself with an array of school and office supplies bearing Star Wars pictures and logos.

OFFICE SUPPLIES

The only problem with Star Wars office supplies is that they favor the rebel alliance, while most offices resemble the galactic empire. To be true to life, they should have faceless Stormtrooper images. Why sell pens one at a time to individual rebels. I bet a carton of Gamorrean Guard pens, with a bonus Jabba the Hutt pen for the boss, would sell better—at least if the boss were doing the buying!

STATUES

STATUES — MAQUETTES — BUSTS — FINE REPLICAS

It would take an impressive bankroll to collect all of the items in this section, and I doubt that very many people do so. However, most collectors could afford to buy, save up for, or convince a relative to buy one (or a few) items, which then forms the centerpiece of their collection.

The prices listed here are either the full list price for the item, or a slightly lower price if I found several dealers selling the items for less. You may be able to find the one you want for even less, particularly if the dealer has had it for a long time. This does not mean that these fine collectibles will never rise in value. The first ones only came out a few years ago, so just about all of them are still available. It takes that long for expensive items to sell through to the ultimate consumer. Prices can't rise until the pieces have finally sold out. When this finally happens, future prices will depend on the statues' intrinsic artistic value.

Don't buy these collectibles to make money. Buy them because you want one to look at and enjoy. Although expensive collectibles hold their value, they are hard to sell quickly. Since almost no one is trying to collect all of them from a series, there is not much extra demand for the first one produced, or any particularly scarce one. A collector with a spare $500 or $1,000 to spend will usually be just as happy to buy the next one produced, and as long as there are collectors willing to buy, the companies will produce new items. This may limit your price speculation, but not your enjoyment. Invite your Star Wars buddies to your house to see your fine collectible and go to their house to see their different ones.

Where do I find one of these, you ask? You can't just drive to your local store and look over a large selection in order to make your choice. One place to try is your local comic shop. All these fine items are distributed to comic shops via Diamond Distribution, but most shops would have one or two, at most. If you shop at a comic store regularly, you could buy Diamond Previews and look for your favorite items as they appear. Then you can get your shop to order one for you. They may be able to get older items for you as well. Some stores, like Spencer Gifts or Sharper Image, stock these collectibles, especially around Christmas time. Check their catalogs too, because there will probably be a better selection listed there. Ask the sales staff to check with the other stores in the chain. The Internet is another good place to shop, and it may be the best source price-wise.

TRADING CARDS

Star Wars, Series 1, card #21 (Topps 1977)

STAR WARS Topps (1977)

Topps was the major producer of movie tie-in cards in the 1960s, 1970s and 1980s. The standard that they created and followed with just about every movie set was 66 (or 88) cards plus 11 (or 22) stickers. If the cards were successful, a second series of “all new” cards was produced. The cards and stickers came in colorful wax wrappers, and all three came in boxes of 36 packs. In those days there were no holograms, foils, autographed cards, 3-D redemption cards, and not even any promo cards, so collectors had nothing to collect except the cards, stickers, wrappers and boxes.

Star Wars was very successful, so a total of five series of cards and stickers was produced. They are numbered consecutively, so as to form one large set of 330 cards and 55 stickers. Stickers came one to a pack, making a sticker set harder to assemble than a card set. Some stickers were even rumored to have been, (gasp!), peeled off and stuck to something, further reducing the number in circulation. Consequently, stickers are worth about $2.00 each, while the cards go for less.

The “best cards” from all three classic series have now been reissued in chromium as Star Wars Chromium Archives. Card series are listed in chronological order, so these cards are listed near the end of this section. Checklists of all the series through early 1998 are included in my previous book, The Galaxy's Greatest Star Wars Collectibles Price Guide, 1999 Edition.

Series 1, blue border with stars

Set: 66 cards/11 stickers . . . . .	$75.00
Pack: 7 cards + 1 sticker . . . . .	8.00
Box: 36 packs . . . . .	200.00
Box: Empty . . . . .	10.00
Wrapper: C-3PO, black background . . . . .	2.00

Series 2, red border

Set: 66 cards/11 stickers . . . . .	45.00
Pack: . . . . .	5.00
Box: 36 packs . . . . .	110.00
Box: Empty . . . . .	8.00
Wrapper: Darth Vader, yellow background . . . . .	2.00

Series 3, yellow border

Set: 66 cards/11 stickers . . . . .	50.00
Pack: . . . . .	5.00
Box: 36 packs . . . . .	120.00
Box: Empty . . . . .	8.00
Wrapper: R2-D2, purple background . . . . .	2.00

Card #207 (in Series 4) was originally printed (intentionally or unintentionally, depending on which story you believe) with C-3PO appearing to have a large but very un-droid-like male appendage. This would have been appropriate in the movie Flesh Gordon, but not in Star Wars. The card was reprinted, with the offending item removed. Collectors with warped minds have placed a high value on the card—I’m still looking for it at a better price. Maybe it will be included in some future series of Star Wars Chromium Archives, but somehow I doubt it.

OTHER EARLY STAR WARS CARDS

There were several other types of Star Wars cards, stickers, and wrappers which appeared in the late 1970s and early 1980s. The Wonder Bread series of 16 cards came one per loaf of bread. General Mills cereals had two series of stickers and Kellogg's had peel-away sticker cards in its cereal. Meanwhile, Topps produced sugar-free bubble gum with distinctive wrappers and inside photos. Burger King gave out three-card strips, while Hershey's candy bars could be purchased in six-packs with a tray card.

THE EMPIRE STRIKES BACK Topps (1980)

While there were only three series of The Empire Strikes Back cards from Topps, there were more actual cards and stickers offered than for the previous movie. As before, stickers are more valuable than cards because there was only one sticker per pack. The packs also contained a stick of bubble gum, which is not a collectible and no longer edible. If you open a pack, save the wrapper and throw the gum away.

Set: 5 cards cut from trays . . . . .	5.00

RETURN OF THE JEDI
Topps (1983)

There were only two series of Return of the Jedi cards and only about half as many total cards as in the previous two series. Stickers are again more valuable and each comes with two different backgrounds. While modern cards are of much higher quality than these and the previous Topps Star Wars cards, hardly anyone collects them! All the collecting action is in the promo cards and chase cards. At least these sets are collected.

STAR WARS GALAXY
Topps (1993, Art)

Star Wars Galaxy cards were the first new set of Star Wars cards in 10 years and the first to use art rather than pictures from the movies. The first section provides an all new look at the main characters, with art by Joe Smith. Variant cards with these images were used with the Just Toys Bend-Ems figures as well. A number of them also made their way onto T-shirts. The New Visions 60-card subset features full color illustrations from top comic book artists, including Gil Kane, Sam Keith, Dale Keown, Ken Steacy, Dave Stevens, and Al Williamson. In addition, there are subsets covering the design of Star Wars and the art of Star Wars.

Star Wars Galaxy (One), promo card (Topps 1993)

Star Wars Galaxy (One), 6 cards (Topps 1993)

This first Star Wars Galaxy set is also an important element in the Star Wars marketing revival. New novels and comics had started in 1991, but very few other collectibles were being produced. This card series was heavily marketed and gave a good boost to the Star Wars revival.

It gave a much needed boost to Topps as well. They had fallen behind their competitors in trading card quality and had only begun to catch up the previous year. Superhero trading cards were hot at this time, and Topps was in the process of was losing their only foothold in this market, the Batman movie cards. They were concentrating on promoting their own comic book lines and needed to show that they were still serious about trading cards. They showed everybody, and have been producing Star Wars cards regularly ever since. Their Star Wars Galaxy magazine started the following fall.

The Millennium Falcon factory set was one of the best publisher/editor freebies Topps ever gave away. Thanks again, Topps, for sending me one.

STAR WARS GALAXY TWO Topps (1994)

The second Star Wars Galaxy card series continued the fine art work and great overall quality of the first series. As with the first series, most of the collecting has centered around the promo cards and chase cards. Some promo cards, such as those given away at shows, are inevitably difficult to obtain. If you didn't go to the show, you may have to pay a lot for the card. The value of other promo cards, such as those that came with magazines or comic books, can be puzzling. Often they can still be found, bagged with the magazine or comic, for a very reasonable price. I have attempted to list the sources for as many of them as possible. Don't pay a fortune for a promo card without first looking for the original comic, magazine or toy that it came with. You might save money and have another collectible in the bargain.

Star Wars Galaxy Two, Biker Scout/Ewok promo card and regular series card (Topps 1994)

Star Wars Galaxy Two, Bonus Cards Un-cut Sheet (Topps 1994)

STAR WARS GALAXY—BEND-EMS Topps (1993–95, Art)

Most of JustToys' Bend-Em figures came with trading cards from 1993 to 1995. The cards are variant Star Wars Galaxy cards, which are lettered on the back instead of numbered. Their earliest cards and figures matched, but the later ones were random, making it that much harder to complete a set of cards. Consequently, later cards are worth more than earlier cards. There are 28 cards in the set, plus three mail-in cards. The cards may very well be more collectible (and more valuable) than the figures.

Star Wars Bend-ems, 4 cards (Topps 1993–95)

STAR WARS Merlin (1997)

These are a recent set of standard-sized trading cards available to comic shops through Diamond Distribution. The cards cover all three movies, plus character and vehicle profiles. Merlin is owned by Topps, which explains how they have the rights to produce Star Wars trading cards.

Set: 125 cards	$30.00
Pack:	1.50
Box:	45.00
Chase Cards , oversize, three different, each	20.00

ACTION MASTERS Kenner (1994–95)

Action Master die-cast figures came with trading cards that were unique to the figures, not promo cards for some card series. Because of this, they are generally overlooked by trading card magazines.

17 different cards from die-cast figures, each	$2.00

STAR WARS WIDEVISION

Topps (1995)

With Widevision cards, Topps went back to images from the movies. This time they had high quality and the same aspect ratio as the films (like the letterbox videotape version). The images were transferred directly from the original film master, not a second-generation version. Production was limited to 4,000 cases.

Widevision versions of the other two movies followed and in 1997 the Special Edition was covered in turn.

STAR WARS WIDEVISION 3-D Topps (1997)

This card set contains all new images from the first movie and utilizes an exclusive, multi-level 3-D digital imagery technology. The technology is quite impressive, but also expensive. When Topps (or anybody) uses their best technology for an entire set, then the extraordinary becomes ordinary and anybody can buy some for a couple of bucks. Where's the fun in that? Maybe that's why there were supposed to be similar sets for the other two movies, but they never appeared.

VEHICLES AND ACCESORIES

Imperial TIE Fighter (Kenner 1978)

VEHICLES, CREATURES, PLAYSETS AND ACCESSORIES

Vehicles are much more important in Star Wars than in most other action figure lines. The 3¼" size of the figures allowed the production of vehicles which were large enough to accommodate several figures, and so the larger vehicles became virtual playsets for the figures. Actual playsets, creatures, such as the Tauntaun and Wampa, and accessories, such as the Mini-Rigs, extended this playset environment.

Many collectors have a large supply of loose figures which they display with the appropriate loose vehicles, creatures, playsets, and accessories. This has helped to keep collector prices for these items at a high level. Vehicles, creatures, and accessories from the classic movies are listed first, followed by those from the newer series.

CLASSIC VEHICLES Kenner (1978–86)

Vehicles were released over the period of all three movies and many which originally came out in Star Wars boxes can be found in boxes from one or both of the later movies. As with the figures, vehicles are listed first in their original box, followed by information and values for later issues. Usually the box logo corresponds to the vintage of the vehicle, but in 1983 Kenner released three of its original vehicles (and one creature) in the Star Wars Collector Series, which just meant that an orange sunburst was added to the original box design.

NEW VEHICLES

Kenner/Hasbro (1995–2002)

Kenner (now Hasbro) has produced new Power of the Force vehicles right along with all the new action figures, and their boxes have followed the same color sequence—first red, then green, with a few purple boxes for Shadows of the Empire vehicles, then a different green design, and currently “Power of the Jedi,” with the same green design. There have been box variations as well, and many can be identified by the packaging variation number found near the bar code on most boxes.

Electronic X-Wing Fighter (Kenner 1995)

In February 2000, Toys “R” Us sold Hasbro’s excess stock of vehicles for $9.95 each. Many valuable vehicles were included, including expensive AT-ATs and F/X Red-5 X-Wing Fighters. They also sold deluxe creatures such as Rancors and Banthas for the same price. I hope you got the ones you needed, but if you didn’t, your friendly neighborhood or Internet dealer may have a few left—but not for $9.95!

SHIPS

Kenner (1997–98)

Ships differ from “vehicles” because ships are not scaled to fit action figures, but vehicles are. Obviously Kenner can’t make a Star Destroyer that is the same scale as its other vehicles—it would be over 100 feet long!

Collector Fleet in try-me box (Kenner 1997–98)

NEW CREATURES

Kenner (1997–2002)

The first three creature and figure combination boxes arrived in August 1997. The figures are all based on the new footage from the first movie. A lot of them were produced, and Hasbro's overstock was available in early 2000 at Toys "R" Us at $4.95 each. Distribution of the 1998 figures was poor, and local stores rarely had them available, but a few showed up in 2000 along with more of the original three. The Han Solo and Tauntaun is notoriously scarce. Deluxe creatures came out in 1998 and distribution was good, so only a few were left over for red tag sales. Only action figure (3¼") scale creatures are listed here. All doll (12") scale creatures are listed in the "Dolls" section.

EPISODE I CREATURES

The first two Episode I creatures were over-produced like all of the early Episode I action figures. Jabba with the 2-headed announcer, and Eopie with Qui-Gon Jinn came out later and are very scarce. On the other hand, Jabba the Hutt was available in quantity, on a header card with a can of slim and some frogs to eat, as "Jabba Glob." This is listed in the "Figures" section.

Episode I Creature & Figure (Asst. #84125, 1999–2001)

CLASSIC PLAYSETS

Kenner (1979–85)

With all the classic playsets that Kenner produced in the 1980s, you would think that they would have reissued some of them in 1990s. So far they have not done so.

STAR WARS PLAYSETS

Star Wars Playsets (1979)

NEW PLAYSETS

Kenner/Hasbro (1995–2001)

The Electronic Millennium Falcon is pretty much the same as the Classic vehicle of the same name. This was the only new playset for the first few years. If this had come out a few years later, Kenner would have included an exclusive action figure. An "Imperial Scanning Crew" figure was included with the reissued Millennium Falcon carrycase, but the only secret compartments to scan are in this playset/vehicle. See also "Accessories" for some mini-playsets.

Power of the Force Playset, red box

Electronic Millennium Falcon playset/vehicle, with

"4 Real Movie Sounds" (#69785, July 1995) . . . $65.00

Loose, with all parts . . . . . 25.00

EPISODE I PLAYSETS

The premiere Episode I playset is the Naboo Royal Starship. Like so many other Episode I items, it was eventually available at deep discount. It has a number of interesting features, but the one that intrigued me the most was the Queen's throne. There is no Queen Amidala figure that bends at the knees so even if you could get the queen to sit in it, in one of her fancy dresses, her legs would stick straight out!

Episode I Starship Playset

Electronic Naboo Royal Starship Blockade Cruiser/

Playset with "15 Distinct Movie Sounds"

Loose, with all parts and figure. . . . . 20.00

CLASSIC ACCESSORIES

Kenner (1981–84)

Some of the accessories listed in this section were called “playsets” or “one-figure vehicles” on their boxes. What places them in this category is their small size.

MINI-RIGS

Mini-Rigs were one-man “crawling, climbing, flying” accessories for the action figures, that were too small to be part of the regular vehicle line-up. They came in a box with a hanging flap and the best graphics are on the back of the package.

None of these mini-rigs ever appeared in the three movies, but a few showed up in the animated Droids series. These days Hasbro packages such items with a figure and sells them as a “Deluxe” figure.

NEW ACCESSORIES

Kenner (1996–2002)

New Power of the Force Accessories are more like mini-playsets than anything else. Some of the larger weapons, that might have been issued as accessories, were instead sold with figures on header cards as “Deluxe Figures.” In Episode I, Hasbro changed tactics and issued packages of small weapons and equipment as accessory sets, along with larger light-gun weapons.

NEW POWER OF THE FORCE ACCESSORIES

Electronic Episode I Accessories

Electronic Flash Cannon Accessory Set (#26217) . . .	15.00
Electronic Gungan Catapult Accessory Set (#26218) .	15.00

VANS AND RACERS

Various (1978–80)

A less authentic toy than a Star Wars van would be hard to design. Not only are there no cars or vans in the movies, there aren’t even any roads. Anyway, I suppose it could have been a lot worse. Kenner might have made a Superman and Darth Vader motorcycle set? After all, they both wear capes! I guess we were lucky.

Star Wars Van Set, 2 toy vans, 7” in length, black van with Darth Vader picture; white van with good guys, plus 12 barrels, 4 pylons and 2 T-Sticks (Kenner #90170, 1978) . . . . .	$150.00
Darth Vader SSP (Super Sonic Power) Van, black, with Blazin’ Action, gyro powered (Kenner #90160, 1978) . . . . .	50.00
Star Wars Heroes SSP (Super Sonic Power) Van, white, with Blazin’ Action, gyro powered (Kenner #90160, 1978) . . . . .	50.00
Star Wars Duel at Death Star Racing Set, 19” x 20” box (Fundimensions 1978) . . . . .	200.00

WALL ART

Wall art includes just about every kind of picture, poster, or other item that is designed to be framed and/or hung on a wall. Calendars are covered under PAPER.

ANIMATION CELS Royal Animation (1995–97)

Royal Animation makes sericels from the Droids and Ewoks animated TV series. Sericels are silk-screened from the original cel, with an added lithograph background. Each comes with a certificate of authenticity and a Lucas Films seal. The sericels are double-matted and 14" x 18" in size.

Droids Sericels

R2-D2 & C-3PO, Best Friends (DR-1) . . . . .	$90.00
Battle Cruiser (DR-2) . . . . .	90.00
R2-D2 & C-3PO Stranded (DR-3) . . . . .	90.00

Ewoks Sericels

The Big Hug (EW-1) . . . . .	90.00
Celebration (EW-2) . . . . .	90.00

CHROMART

ChromArt prints are 8" x 10" in an 11" x 14" matte. They are made with acrylic, foil and etching to give an illusion of depth. The images come from CD-ROM game boxes and Video Tape Boxes, but the enhancements make them quite striking.

ChromArt Prints (Zanart Entertainment)

SW-C Return of the Jedi . . . . .	$12.00
SW-C2 Darth Vader (1994) . . . . .	12.00
SW-C3 C-3PO and R2-D2 (1994) . . . . .	12.00

LITHOGRAPHS

Many Star Wars limited edition lithographs were created by well-known science fiction and Star Wars artist Ralph McQuarrie. They are 18" x 12" in size, framed and matted, and each comes with an Illuminated 70mm Film Frame. They were issued by Willitts Designs, which is not surprising, since they also produced the many series of 70mm Film Frames covered under STILLS.

Many other prominent Star Wars artists have also produced lithographs, including Boris Valejo, Drew Struzan, the Bros. Hildebrandt, and Dave Dorman. Lithographs fall in the realm of fine art and the high prices that they command are based on this, rather than being driven up by collector demand. They make excellent gifts.

POSTERS

There are many types of posters, from those sold in toy stores to those that come in magazines and as fast food giveaways, but the most valuable by far are the theatrical posters that were issued to promote the movie. These had no initial price—they were sent to movie theaters or given away at shows. Their value is entirely collector driven. There are a considerable number of general movie poster collectors who compete with Star Wars collectors for these posters, keeping the prices high. Posters are most valuable when they are rolled, not folded, and should never be put on your wall using thumb tacks. As a practical matter, this will make it hard to show it to your friends in order to impress them. If your poster is worth $150 or more, you should probably have it professionally framed, which will cost you close to $100, but at least you can then hang it on your wall and show it off.

Unfortunately, valuable posters can be reproduced and sold as if they were the original. These bootlegs are worth a lot less money—and less than nothing to a collector. It's not easy to tell a fake unless you have a real one for comparison and if you have a real one, why are you looking for another one? Naturally the most expensive and most popular posters were the first ones to be counterfeited. Collectors are advised to buy with care, from reputable dealers.
